Song From Asia.
College Church Group.
12 Billion Slaves at Work.
Eternal Peace, 8625.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her."

Biblical prophets are in the group while Darwin and other scientists presumably represent modern prophecy.

Tennessee, which recently tried and convicted Darwin, will be agitated.

THERE IS SOMETHING appropriate in choosing Einstein as the only living man in a group that includes Christ.

Only seven men in the world, it is said, can understand Einstein's teaching, and they are not quite sure about it.

Every man and woman and every child 10 years of age can understand the sermon on the mount, and the divine command: Love one another.

IN ANCIENT ATHENS, with slaves far outnumbering free men, a benevolent philosopher said that slavery must always exist because, with no slaves, everyone must work, and there would be no leisure class to develop philosophy, the arts and sciences. The philosopher was right. Better partial slavery than stagnation.

BUT MAN'S GENIUS supplies him with slaves of steel, moved by steam and electricity, far beyond mere imagination. Prof. Ree, who teaches industrial engineering here in New York University, says that machinery in the United States alone generates power equal to that of twelve billion slaves working under the lash. If the population of the earth were multiplied by five, if they were all slaves, and all adults, there would be lacking four billion slaves to do the work that machines do in the United States now.

Man's earthly salvation will be found, and all his problems solved, in his own brain. Even the present slump problem, following the murderous war, will be solved.

THE JEWISH TELEGRAPH AGENCY reports an interesting happening in the Midgal Jewish colony near Jerusalem. A Bedouin of the Arbelhip Arab tribe was found shot dead in a banana grove belonging to Jewish colonists. He had, perhaps, been caught pilfering.

It was a dangerous situation that might start a blood feud. Representatives of Bedouins and Jewish colonists met and signed a peace pact to reign between us from now until eternity.

BEDOUINS AND JEWS face to face, then held the Bedouin tribal rod. A silk handkerchief was put over it, the Jews tied two knots and the Bedouins three in fine handkerchief. Then came the vow of eternal peace, and the Jewish elders embraced the relatives of the dead man.

As in bigger wars, the question of reparations arose, and the Jewish elders after the oath of peace paid $250 in cash to the dead man's relatives agreeing to pay $375 more within two months.

THAT PEACE, like some others, may last, but probably will not. According to the learned Dean Inge, the incident is interesting ethnologically, for he says the original inhabitants of Judea, ancestors of today's Jews, were Bedouins, most savage fighters of all the Semitic tribes.

ALREADY, IN 1930 more than 36,000 people have been killed in automobile accidents, and that agitates us all.

In the same period, a much greater number of mothers have died in childbirth, because no government agency gives them the assistance that the Department of Agriculture gladly gives to a cow or mare in labor.

And that agitates us not at all.

Fear Lynching, Guard Girl's Slayer

POLICE RING JAIL, GRILL FARMER

International News Service

COUDERSPORT, Pa., Sept. 15.—A detail of heavily armed state police was hastily assembled and thrown around the Potter County jail today when reports were heard that an attempt might be made to storm the jail and lynch Harry Koons, farmhand, who has confessed the murder of 12-year-old Helen Cass, daughter of Koons' employer.

The coroner's jury held Coon on the charge of first degree murder. Coon said he killed the girl because she and the other members of the Cass family treated him like a dog. According to his statement, Coon seized the child, cut her throat with a jackknife, stripped off her clothing and slashed the body.

Because of these threats, reports were broadcast last night that Koons had been spirited away from the jail and taken to the McKean County jail at Smethport, to preclude any lynching attempts by enraged citizens.

HEAVY GUARD ORDERED

When it became known today that these reports were untrue, that Koons still cringed behind the bars in the jail here and that threats of storming the place were being openly made, the State Police were ordered out to guard the prisoner.

The little girl was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Cass of Seven Bridges, 10 miles north of here. Koons was employed by Cass on the latter's farm. Late Saturday, he was sent out to repair broken fences.

Helen followed Koons. She was said to have been very fond of the farmhand. Neither had returned at nightfall, so an alarm was broadcast. After an all-night search, Koons was found hiding in an abandoned barn.

He at first denied all knowledge of the little girl's whereabouts, but finally broke down and directed officers to a rubbish heap, where he said her body would be found.

BODY FOUND THERE

Under the rubbish heap lay the girl's body. Her throat bore a jagged slash. She had not been attacked.

Koons' motive for the child-slaying was revenge, he told police. The prisoner asserted that he killed Helen because her father, after promising his automobile to perform an errand, sent another man.

Feeling against Koons ran high today, despite the outpost of state police flung around the jail. The prisoner was under bond as a deserter from the United States Army, and Helen's father had provided the bond. Koons was also awaiting trial on a charge of forgery. Bond on this charge also was provided by Cass.

51 Children Hurt In Bus Accident

CLEVELAND, Sept. 15. (INS.)—Fifty-one school children were injured in Warrensville, near here, today when a Maple Heights School bus in which they were riding swerved off the road while attempting to pass a wagon and overturned into a ditch.

BAKER BOWL, Philadelphia, Sept. 15.—Down in third place in the National League pennant race as a result of Brooklyn winning its tenth straight game while the Cardinals divided with the Braves yesterday, the Chicago Cubs, who trailed yesterday, resumed their fight for the National League pennant here this afternoon by engaging the Phillies in a doubleheader. The Bruins needed two victories to retain the top position they gained Brooklyn lost.

Fred Blake and Hal Benge were the starting pitchers in the first game.

The Phillies got away to a five-run lead in the early innings, but the Cubs overtook them by scoring seven runs in the fifth.

The game in detail:

FIRST INNING

CHICAGO—English struck out. Heathcote struck out. Hornsby flied to Klein.

PHILADELPHIA—Bickell flied to Cuyler. Thompson doubled off the right field fence. Friberg singled to right, scoring Thompson. Klein flied to Wilson. Hurst forced Friberg, English to Hornsby. One run, two hits.

SECOND INNING

CHICAGO—Wilson flied to Hurst. Cuyler flied to Hurst. Kelly fanned.

PHILADELPHIA—Wilson walked. Davis was thrown out at

KLINE LEADS IN HONORING PINCHOT

Nominee, in Radio Address, Says Voters Must Do Duty, To Get Good Government

Gifford Pinchot, Republican nominee for governor, broadcasting today over KDKA, declared good government would be assured if the maximum number of voters goes to the polls November 4. He said:

"There are places where less than one half the number of people vote. These places usually have bad government.

"There are more good people than bad people, and when nearly everybody votes, the people who vote right almost invariably outnumber the people who vote wrong.

"The controlled vote in all our great cities is a challenge to almost three-fourths of the possible number of voters."

MANY AT RECEPTION

City and county officials, party leaders, members of the General Assembly and of the city and county Republican committees greeted Pinchot at the public reception in Room 1566, William Penn Hotel. Another was held from 2 to 3:30 p. m. today.

The visitors included:

Mayor Charles H. Kline, State Senator James J. Coyne and Herman P. Brandt, Public Works Director Edward G. Lang, Controller W. J. McGregor and their wives; Chairman Police Capt. Peter P. Walsh, First Ward; Fred Lengle, Sixteenth; Robert Murray, Twenty-third; Justice-appointed Tax Assessor Fred A. Sacher, Twenty-fourth; Tom Mansfield, Thirty-fifth, and Charles J. McBride, Thirty-fifth; Charles J. McBride, Thirty-second; Michael DeRosa, Twenty-first; J. P. O'Donnell, Twenty-seventh; A. B. Birch, Twenty-sixth.

OTHER LEADERS THERE

Other leaders among those who greeted Pinchot were: City President of Council Lee S. Hart; Commissioners R. J. Alderdice, George J. Kambach and W. Y. English; State Senator Myles

Lipton's Yacht Runs Into Bad Trap and Trails From Start; 2 Miles Behind

BULLETIN.

ABOARD U. S. S. KANE, off Newport, R. I., Sept. 15.—Enterprise led Shamrock V by more than two miles as she rounded the 20-mile marker this afternoon in the second of their series of races for the America's Cup and headed for home, 18 miles away.

Enterprise was footing along at a good pace. In addition to balloonery, both boats were carrying stay sails in the search for the second marker.

The American boat made the second leg of the 37-mile course in an hour and 1 minute, as compared with the first and 10 minutes she required to complete the first leg.

U. S. S. KANE, in America's Cup Course, Sept. 15.—The American yacht Enterprise led Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock by six minutes today at the end of the first 10 miles of their second 20-mile race in the series for the America's cup.

Columbia eyed Resolute start after she fouled in the 10-minute beat, but the wind, the Irish baronet's boat appeared to have no chance against the American defender as they ended the first leg of the 37-mile course.

Harold S. Vanderbilt, wealthy member of the Enterprise syndicate in boat, got a masterful advantage of every shifting breeze.

BRITON MEETS MASTER

Ernest Ned Heard, veteran English skipper at the helm of the Shamrock, appeared to have met his match in the American sportsman. He fought a losing battle from the start and lost precious minutes at the turn when he nearly reached the mark a bit too early and was forced to pull out the channel. Trolley Runs Over West End Child, 3

Toddling across Wabash avenue in the West End playground, James Dugan, aged 3, of 124 Wabash avenue, was knocked under a street car this afternoon. His right foot was cut off at the ankle and he suffered other injuries. He is in South Side Hospital.

The boy is a son of Thomas Dugan, cab driver.

HELEN CHARGES DEATH THREAT

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(AP.)—The question of who first named the $50,000 which Helen Kane, boop-a-doop singer, received from Murray Posner, bankrupt dress manufacturer, grew complicated today when the songstress accused Posner of having threatened to kill her if she did not testify falsely concerning the money.

Posner, who followed Miss Kane to the witness stand at a referee's hearing on the affairs of the Bond Dress Company, Posner's firm, called her charges ridiculous and absurd.

Miss Kane's version was that Posner went to her hotel room in Chicago and demanded that she testify that the money was for investment in the dress business. When she refused, he said, he pushed her against the wall and started to choke her. She was saved, she said, only by the appearance of her secretary, Ethel Stone, who called a house detective.

Philadelphia Editor Hurt in Auto Crash

WOODBURY, N. J., Sept. 15.—(INS.)—Fred Fuller Shedd, editor-in-chief of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, received a possible fracture of the hip, lacerations and bruises, in an auto accident near here yesterday. Underwood Hospital attaches revealed today. He passed a restless night, but his condition is not regarded as critical.

Mrs. Shedd, who was also injured in the collision of their auto with a telephone pole near Iona, N. J., had a very good night. She is suffering from cuts and bruises.

RECOUNT ENDS, REPORT SOON

The Board of Elections which has been conducting the recount of [illegible] has completed its work [illegible] and was prepared to file [illegible] today.

[illegible] the recount [illegible] Thomas [illegible] Walter S. Stevens and Howard Bennett, members of the board, and James C. Monteith, chief clerk, will leave [illegible] their reports to Washington for Senator [illegible] Senate investigating committee which already has studied [illegible] of the recount.

In addition, District Attorney [illegible] has announced that [illegible] will study the recount board's reports to determine if there is any basis for prosecution of election boards for fraud.

Just how much, if any, fraud was uncovered will not be known until the board summarizes its work. It has filed a report on two ballot boxes in which minor discrepancies were cited.

From Washington, the board's representatives will go to Philadelphia on their own initiative to study the methods employed by the Philadelphia Recount Board.

The combined efforts of [illegible] and first aid squads failed [illegible] the life of Rolla Morrison, 42, found [illegible] in the garage of his home at 6617 Rowan avenue, East End, early [illegible] today. Death was [illegible] by [illegible] poisoning.

Neighbors reported to the Morrison home that smoke was pouring from the garage. Morrison's son, Robert, investigated and found his father under the car. The motor was running and it is believed Morrison was repairing the machine.

Police were summoned and every effort was made to resuscitate the victim. The officers were assisted later by a physician and by Mine Safety Appliance Company employes. Morrison died in about an hour. He was a tea and coffee merchant.

Argentina Chief Claims Coup Was Necessary To End Dictatorship

NEW YORK, Sept. 15 ... A spectacular radio broadcast ... and his ... Buenos Aires ... overthrow ... Dictatorship ... covers ...

CLEARED IN ENGLISH

The Argentine Republic has awakened from sleep. The government Irigoyens which has just fallen amidst execration of public opinion allowed all institutions of my country to fall into the most absolute disorder.

Even the population was feeling the decadent effect of the pernicious political party individualized in the person of its leader. A rude awakening was necessary, therefore, for the nation to recover its lofty ideals.

CLAIMS STRONG BACKING

The chaotic state of affairs which existed for the last two years called for re-establishment of the rules of conduct laid down by the constitution. A group of patriots resolved to throw themselves into the fray.

We have assumed the government by will of the people, the Army and the Navy. The national supreme court of justice has hastened to recognize the provisional government.

"With the exception of the party just overthrown, all political parties, the leading banks, who have spontaneously placed at disposal of the government $100,000,000, the national and foreign chambers of commerce—all the live forces of the republic have proclaimed their faith in the provisional government.

"The inflexible purpose of the provisional government is traditional friendship with all other countries in the world, and brotherhood with the nations in America. It was precisely the government overthrown on the sixth of September that ignored these rules of conduct."

Uriburu closed with a pledge that as soon as possible he would be enabled to elect its new and legitimate representatives.

At the end Alejandro T. Bollini, Argentine consul-general in New York, broadcasting from the New York studios complimented the Hearst newspapers and the National Broadcasting Company. He declared the direct radio telephone would be a great stimulus toward better understanding between the two peoples.

SMALLER CROWD

Shamrock and Enterprise were racing before a more colorful but smaller group of spectators than on Saturday.

Most of the spectators [illegible] were private yachts of [illegible] proportions.

In his attempt to win today's race, where victory had eluded him all three years, Sir Thomas last night made a drastic move. Late at night, when all was quiet in Newport harbor, he put his sailors to work and had them remove 2,000 pounds of lead ballast from the keel of his challenger.

PAYS RANSOM OF $10,000

DES MOINES, Ia., Sept. 14.—(AP.)—James Sheridan, retired Des Moines business man abducted September 2, returned home following his release by kidnapers to whom ransom, estimated at $10,000 was paid. He is known to have been driven in an automobile from Illinois, but few details of the case were revealed by the authorities.

Sheridan's release was attributed to efforts by Sheriff Park A. Findley, who traced the kidnapers in four Illinois cities. Payment of the ransom money terminated negotiations begun September 4, when a messenger was sent to Des Moines, with a note penned by Sheridan in which he directed that a ransom price of $50,000 be paid for his release.

The city where Sheridan gained his freedom, is understood to have been Galesburg, Ill. Sheridan, former owner of a cigar store, disappeared with a man who had mentioned something about St. Paul. He is known to have been transferred between Galesburg, Aurora, Springfield and Peoria, Ill., during the period he was held.

MALONE URGES REGISTRATION

Former President of Council James F. Malone has issued a statement urging residents of Pittsburgh, McKeesport, Clairton and Duquesne to register that they may vote November 4.

Those who did not register September 4 may do so tomorrow or October 4, provided they have a tax receipt issued after November 3, 1928. Malone declared. He explained that the size of many election districts has been doubled as a result of reducing the number of districts to almost half the number of a year ago, while the number of registrars has not been increased to handle the larger enrollment.

Malone advised all that find it possible to register early tomorrow so as to avoid congesting the polling places late tomorrow and the final registration day, October 4.

Pittsburgh polling places will be open tomorrow from 8 to 11 a. m. and from 5 to 11 p. m., daylight saving time. Polling places in the other cities will be open from 8 to 10 a. m. from noon to 3 p. m. and from 5 to 11 p. m., daylight saving time.

Mishap Costs Life Of Gibsonia Miner

Howard McKelvey, 29, Gibsonia coal miner, died in Mercy Hospital today of injuries suffered when he was crushed by machinery while working in the mine of the Butler Consolidated Coal Company, according to a report received at the morgue.

OHIO BANK QUIZ DEMANDED

WASHINGTON COURT HOUSE, O., Sept. 15.—(AP)—Grand jury investigation of the affairs of the Ohio State Bank and the Peoples and Drovers Bank, which closed their doors last summer, will be asked today by County Prosecutor W. C. Paxon, he announced last night.

The inquiry was requested by a number of citizens here last week when an involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed against Mal S. Daugherty, former president of the Ohio State Bank and brother of Harry M. Daugherty, attorney general in the Harding cabinet.

The petition listed claims totaling $77,281.51, including $52,100 in promissory notes to the Ohio State Bank and $25,000 in similar notes to the Peoples and Drovers bank. Attorney General Gilbert Bettman of Ohio said that Daugherty had admitted he was unable to pay his debts.

He came here in 1923 and later incorporated a field but went bankrupt in 1929. He moved to Detroit where for a year he flew with Burns fliers.

Woman Celebrates 96th Anniversary

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., Sept. 15.—(AP)—Mrs. Mercy Gould, the oldest resident of Williamsport, today celebrates the ninety-sixth anniversary of her birth. Mrs. Gould is the granddaughter of Robert Cavenhover, famous as an Indian scout during the early history of Central Pennsylvania.

Makes Tiny Golf Free After 2 Arrests

BELLAIRE, O., Sept. 15.—(AP)—Hays Marshall, manager of an indoor miniature golf course, was arrested twice yesterday on a charge of violating the Sunday laws and posted a $200 bond each time.

Then he hung out a sign, "Free to the Public." Hundreds crowded the course while police took names.

Two theaters which managers had announced would be operated, failed to open their doors when officers appeared at the entrances.

'REDS' JEERFISH AT FORUM

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(AP)—A crowd of Communists booed Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr., and walked out of a meeting when he asked them why they did not go back where they came from.

The incident occurred during an open forum after a symposium on Communism in which Fish had taken part. Nettled by questions from the audience, Fish said:

"If you don't like it here, why don't you go back where you came from."

SENATOR DEATH QUIZ BROADENS

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—(AP)—The state's attorney's office, investigating the sudden death of State Senator John T. Joyce, sought today to learn some of the circumstances surrounding the death in 1925 of Mrs. Joyce's former husband, Howard Daly.

Daly, from whom Mrs. Joyce had been divorced for some time, died of heart disease, according to the death certificate. Mrs. Joyce said yesterday that alcoholism led to his death and that she had been attempting to cure him of it even after they had been divorced.

Mrs. Joyce, who is pressing an investigation of her own into the cause of her husband's death, charged that the action of the state's attorney's office in inquiring into her first husband's death as well as the questioning of two women was for political purposes.

Chicago Opens Drive On Narcotics Users

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—(INS)—A concentrated drive against drug users, said to be the largest undertaken by the Federal authorities here in several years, was in full swing today. Twenty narcotic agents, assisted by 50 detectives, had descended on 45 places.

Warrants for more than 100 persons were obtained. Undercover agents had been working for two months, gathering evidence against narcotic users and sellers.

2D GIRL KILLING STIRS CITY

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Sept. 15.—(AP)—A second girl murder as atrocious, as unprovoked and apparently as barren of clues as the first, has transformed South Bend into a city of agitated citizenry, calling upon the law for the quick arrest and punishment of the slayers.

Alice Woltman, 17, was killed in her bed early yesterday. Her throat was cut with a razor. So quick was the killing and so silent that three other children asleep in the same room—one of them beside her in the bed—were unaware of it.

Two young men who had been paying her attention have been questioned.

Less than three weeks ago 7-year-old Marberine Appel was found slain in an alley near her home.

The two killings today prompted the taking of added precautions for protection of South Bend children. There was a noticeable absence of children from the streets last night.

Rejected, He Kills Successful Suitor

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—(AP)—Bullets tore away one side of a triangle last night when Harry Brandon, unsuccessful suitor for the hand of Mrs. Jean Marshall, entered her flat and slew the man she planned to marry, Joseph Carney.

Garments of Last-long-lastic

Now we have a new type of elastic . . . which doubles the service of a foundation garment! Pulling, strain and laundering will not break the threads—and as a result your foundation garment of Last-long-lastic will retain its shape much longer than the usual type corset.

Last-long-lastic is found only in "Self-Mould" foundation garments—that hold and mold the figure to lines of natural, youthful slenderness.

Girdles for average and tall figures, and all-in-one garments for large or average figures are priced from $7.50 to $12.50.

NEW FARM FUND APPEAL SEEN

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—Faced with a "paper loss" of about $50,000,000, the Federal Farm Board will ask Congress for more money in December, it was learned today.

The board is "in the red" this amount on the basis of present prices for wheat and cotton, on which it has made its heaviest commitments.

The board has no intention of liquidating its vast holdings of wheat at the present "panic" prices—the lowest since 1914—but confidently believes better prices are near, it was said.

Out of the $250,000,000 appropriated by Congress in the move to help the farmers, all but about $80,000,000 has been absorbed in loans. Even some of the remaining $80,000,000 has been tagged for loans, it was learned. No decision has been reached on the amount Congress will be asked to appropriate, it was said.

WARSAW CLASH COSTS 2 LIVES

WARSAW, Sept. 15.—(AP)—One civilian and a policeman were killed and three policemen and some 20 civilians were wounded, in a fight following a meeting held by supporters of a parliamentary bloc which opposes Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, the prime minister.

At least 100 persons were arrested, many of them armed.

A government communique says the political group left the hall with the members singing revolutionary songs.

The police attempted to disperse the gathering, the government statement says, whereupon someone threw a grenade, which wounded several persons, including an officer of the police. The latter then drew revolvers and fired.

LEGION FAIR SUCCESS

A substantial sum was realized by the Bellevue street fair held last week by North Boroughs Post, No. 116, American Legion, according to officers of the post. Edward F. Locher has been elected commander for the ensuing year.

Others chosen were: senior vice commander, W. S. Mershon; junior vice commander, Charles L. Yost; finance officer, E. B. Logan; adjutant, E. S. Fairley; directors, H. P. Aeberli, A. A. Bowdle, Thomas C. Barr, W. G. Duff, H. S. Johnson, and O. B. Wallace; chaplain, the Rev. John B. Magee; assistant chaplain, R. L. Cleland; sergeant-at-arms, George Weir; county committee delegate, S. C. Goodnough. These officers will be installed next month.

U. S. Ambassador Arrives in Japan

YOKOHAMA, Sept. 15.—(AP)—W. Cameron Forbes, United States ambassador to Japan, arrived here from San Francisco today. He was met by Charge D'Affaires Neville of the American embassy and others and motored immediately to Tokyo. He established his temporary residence at the Imperial hotel.

Sleepwalker Dies In 3-Story Tumble

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—(AP)—Manuel Gonzales Revilla, 23, the son of a Panama physician, died as a result of a fall from his third story apartment which was attributed to sleepwalking.

Revilla was a Georgetown University student. Gabriel Velazquez, his roommate, said Revella was a somnambulist.

Bokhara Coats

New 1930 Models Are Ready

Coats of the luxurious, imported bokhara, which has become as staple as fur, should be more popular than ever in this season of greater elegance in fashion.

The new models for women are lovely, with fuller lines, large, flattering fur collars, and with fur used in new ways as sleeve trimming. . . . Some of them follow the Empire line, as does the coat pictured, while others are simply straight.

The coats at $100 are trimmed with kit fox and German fitch. And those at $145 with Jap mink, fisher-dyed fitch and sable ringtail.

WEARABILITY . . . Is the Principle of These

Daytime Dresses

"Easy for women to wear, easy for men to look at," is the way one authority describes the well designed new dresses for fall. And this group of fine "dressmaker" frocks of dull crepes, metallic crepes, satin and velvet, fulfills that ideal perfectly.

. . . Easy to wear because they are feminine in style without being fussy . . . Because their waistlines are placed normally . . . Because the fullness of their skirts is grouped so that it does not spread and enlarge the figure's outline, and skirts are straight at the bottom . . . Because the fabrics are soft and gracious . . . Because many of the dresses are copies after such excellent designers as Lelong, Vionnet and Germaine Lecomte.

Of new, dull-surfaced fabrics in rubytone, green, brown and black, with the fur forming the required contrast in this season of contrasts in color.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 15.—(AP.)—Little Prince Baudouin, baby son of Crown Prince Leopold and Crown Princess Astrid, of Belgium, has by royal decree been given the title of "Conte De Hainaut." The title is an ancient and traditional one. Baudouin one day may succeed his father as king of the Belgians.

BALLOON FAILS IN RECORD TRY

AUGSBURG, Germany, Sept. 15.—(Universal.)—The projected 10-mile balloon flight into unexplored regions of space of Prof. August Piccard took him a little less than 10 feet from the earth Sunday and then landed him and his assistant, Dr. Knipper, with a thud.

At 8:30 a. m. the professor entered the aluminum globe in which he hoped to live during his exploration of rarified atmosphere.

The balloon rose and lifted the metal ball a few feet. Then it dropped back with a thud. This was repeated twice.

Then the balloon was made fast and the professor crawled out, explaining:

"The atmosphere was too damp and the temperature too low to allow the gas properly to expand."

He said it would probably be 10 days before he tries again.

BURGLAR HUNT ENDS IN SUICIDE

BALTIMORE, Sept. 15.—(AP.)—Returning to their bedroom from an early morning trip through the house in search of an intruder, Mrs. Lucy Cunabaugh told police her husband, John Cunabaugh, 57, turned his gun on himself and sent a bullet into his head. He died in a hospital.

Mrs. Cunabaugh said she was awakened about 5 o'clock in the morning by noises in the house. Arousing her husband, she said he took a revolver and began the hunt that was unsuccessful.

CALL FOR LOW PRICES TO AFFECT QUALITIES

Bureau Officer Sees Producers Meeting Retail Demand With Inferior Goods.

Indications are that more low-specification merchandise will be produced and offered this Fall than in many seasons past because of the retail demand for lower-price goods, it was asserted yesterday by Frank Stutz, general manager of the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau. Pressure for lower prices will outrun the extent of the drop in commodity levels, he warned, with the result that manufacturers will feel obliged to take the reduction out of material content and workmanship.

In the past two weeks, Mr. Stutz added, his organization, which functions under the auspices of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, has had requests from three of the largest retail organizations in the country for quotations on contract testing, which, he said, was a clear indication that retailers are realizing the value of more precaution in the buying of merchandise. Two large stores here, he said, are considering a plan to install branches of the bureau as adjuncts to store buyers and to the receiving department to see that incoming merchandise agrees with sample.

"Retailers," Mr. Stutz declared, "should inspect deliveries more closely this year. The strong demand for low-price merchandise will leave but one alternative for it to be met at a profit to manufacturers. That is, 'Give them less than they pay for.'

"The situation, therefore, is such that no one will benefit by the drop in commodity prices unless steps are taken to establish a basis of trading where the specifications of tests of the merchandise form the common denominator of value. This is a more vital need of the trade as a whole than ever before because the manufacturer is held to economic values in fixing prices. The retailer does not operate on this basis, but permits the psychology of the tempo of the times to govern his appraisal of those values.

"The pressure of business conditions such as the stores have been experiencing creates a demand on the retailers for depressed prices and distress merchandise, which in turn creates a panic among the manufacturers. The trouble is that the producer is talking one language and the retailer another, with the result that purchase approaches a barter basis. The manufacturer says: 'I must get this price.' The retailer rejoins: 'The price is what I want to pay.'

"Thus there is no basis of understanding which reconciles the difference between the market price and the offered price. Economic values lose their appeal or meaning in accordance with v[illegible] it is 'high spot' competition. Hosiery, for example, was once made and sold as hosiery. Then it became a price football, subject to price chiseling, with the resultant unsettlement prevailing today.

"As I see it, testing and specifications will be the eventual common denominator of translating economic or basic cost into retailer or consumer values."

GENOA HONORS ST. CATHERINE

GENOA, Italy, Sept. 15.—(AP)—The famous confraternity of the Caravana, a guild of longshoremen who are under vows never to swear or drink to excess, paraded today clad in magnificent hand-embroidered coats of gold and silver and violet colored velvet woven on handlooms in the twelfth century, in honor of their patron St. Catherine of Genoa, a contemporary of Columbus.

Bearing ancient church lanterns of wrought gold aloft on tall coral-colored standards, these most unusual dockers led the procession through the city streets in commemoration of the saintly and noble lady, who was a member of the noted Fieschi family. Flags were flying from all the windows, the banners of the proud old seaport being stacked beside those of Italy and many other countries whose ships put in here.

Behind the longshoremen, bearing lighted tapers, came members of the Genoese aristocracy, dressed in their best and displaying all their jewels. The procession passed the glass casket in which reposes the holy woman's body, whether by ingenious embalming or by miracle, preserved today just as at her death in 1510.

ADMIRAL'S SON HELD SUICIDE

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(AP)—Lieut. Woodward Phelps, U. S. N., eldest son of Rear Admiral William Woodward Phelps, was found dead last night aboard the Northampton in dry dock at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, with a bullet wound in his temple.

Capt. Vernon, of the cruiser, said no reason was known why the young officer should have committeed suicide. He declined to call the death a suicide until an official report was made, but the lieutetnant was believed to have shot himself.

Phelps, graduated from the Naval Academy in 1924, was 29 years old. His wife is a Maryland woman, whose maiden name the officers of the Northampton did not recall.

The vessel had come into dry dock Thursday night. It is one of the new 10,000-ton light cruisers.

Bad Weather Delays Boyd's Ocean Flight

CHARLOTTETOWN, Prince Edward Island, Sept. 15.—(INS)—Unfavorable weather today held here Capt. Erroll Boyd, Canadian flier, and Lieut. Harry Connor, his American assistant. They were forced to land Saturday night, because of head winds and a low ceiling, while en route from Montreal to Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, where they will take off on their flight to London.

Boyd said they would hop tomorrow or Wednesday for Harbor Grace and there await good weather for the trans-Atlantic jump.

Giant X-Ray Tube Equal of Radium

PASADENA, Cal., Sept. 15.—(AP)—A new giant X-ray tube, which designers believe will unleash healing powers which cannot be surpassed by use of radium, has been developed at the California Institute of Technology here.

The tube, measuring 10 feet in length and 12 inches in diameter, was designed and developed by Dr. C. C. Lauritzen and his associates. Dr. Robert A. Millikan, noted physicist, acted in an advisory capacity.

Thugs Cut, Rob Man Of $120 on Bridge

Robbed and beaten while walking on the Manchester Bridge early today, John Sackatisch, 48, 1605 Gross way, was treated for cuts about the face and body at the Allegheny General Hospital.

Attacked by two white men, one of whom wielded a pen knife, Sackotisch was robbed of $120 and suffered slashes about the face and hands. City detectives are searching for his assailants.

Mother of Four Babies

"Although I am only 22 years old, I have four babies to care for. Before my first baby was born my mother urged me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was so terribly weak. I had to lie down four or five times a day. After three bottles I could feel a great improvement. I still take the Vegetable Compound whenever I need it for it gives me strength to be a good mother to my family."—Mrs. Vern L. Dennings, 510 Johnson Street, Saginaw, Michigan.

G. O. P. LEADERS IN ACCORD ON SHAW WIN

Senators and Candidates Join in Acclaim Over Anti-League Victory

By FRASER EDWARDS.
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—Republican senators and senatorial candidates while differing widely on domestic issues, were joining today in acclaiming the decisive victory score by George H. Shaw in Colorado's Republican senatorial primary on the anti-league court issue.

In telegrams from many sections of the country, these distinguished Republican leaders stressed the opposition of the American people to this adjunct of the League of Nations, which was again demonstrated in the Rocky Mountain state.

"Another warning by the rank and file of the Republican party to its misguided leaders," declared Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, in vigorously commenting upon the repudiation of the League Court by the voters of Colorado.

RUTH COMMENTS

Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick who defeated Senator Deneen of Illinois for the Republican senatorial nomination in that state last April with the League Court as the dominant issue, said:

"The victory of George Shaw as a candidate for the Republican nomination for United States senator from Colorado is another significant sidelight on the attitude of the people toward the proposal to put the United States into the League Court."

The revolutions in South America and the chaotic conditions in many European nations were cited by Senator Otis F. Glenn, of Illinois, as compelling arguments for America to mind her own business at home and remain aloof from international entanglements.

While Senator George H. Moses of New Hampshire, one of the League of Nations irreconcilables and chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, declined to comment upon the Shaw victory until he has personally canvassed the situation in Colorado, he intimated that he may have something to say on the matter in the near future.

JOHNSON SEES WARNING

"The impressive victory of George H. Shaw, in the contest for United States senator from Colorado is another warning by the rank and file of the Republican party to its misguided leaders.

"The internationalist and international bankers apparently are in control of our foreign policy and are determined through timid and subservient leaders of the Republican party to take us into mad European political adventures.

"Whenever the people themselves have had the opportunity of expression (and wherever possible this has been denied them) they have spoken in no uncertain tones.

RESPONSE EMPHATIC

"In Colorado, Mr. Shaw made his fight on the distinct issue of keeping our country out of European controversies, either through the League of Nations, the League of Nations Court or otherwise, and upon this issue, the response of the people has been immediate and emphatic.

"The Republican party came into power in 1920 because Americans repudiated foreign entanglements or the possibility of political participation in whatever guise in Europe's strifes. We fondly believed then that for one generation at least this question was definitely determined.

"But insidious propaganda, the powerful influence of enormous international finance, the flabby Americanism that longs for foreign approval, and in its inferiority complex shrinks from thought of our own nation have united in intrigue to set aside the verdict of the people; and have never ceased by indirection to accomplish that in which they failed when it was frankly presented to the voters of our country. And now again the issue arises; and again the people speak."

"If the Republican leaders persist in their secret endeavors and succeed surreptitiously in involving America in Europe's politics they will not only be rudely awakened and shocked but they will do the Republican party the greatest dis-service and irretrievable harm.

ALL FOR PEACE

"The admirable statement of Mr. Shaw in the Hearst papers of Saturday should be read by every patriot American. It states the case so plainly and so well that even internationalists ought to pause and ponder. He is eternally right. We are all for peace. We can preserve it best and do most good by minding our own business and being just American."

3 Patients Escape From Insane Ward

LANCASTER, Pa., Sept. 15.—(AP.)—Three youths escaped from the Lancaster County Hospital for the Insane. The patients, who fled during the recreation period, were Edward Whiteman, 16, Lancaster; Jacob Armstrong, Conestoga Center, and Howard Eckman, 19, Columbia. Authorities said none of the three was of a dangerous type of mental patient.

Olyphant Man, Hit By Locomotive, Dies

SCRANTON, Pa., Sept. 15.—(AP.)—Martin Murray, 30, of Olyphant, near here, was fatally injured when run down by a New York, Ontario and Western Railroad train at Olyphant. He died 10 minutes after being admitted to a hospital.

2½ Cents in the Dollar

Not Wall Street's idea of money making

Why has A & P more customers than any other grocer on earth? . . . "It sells for cash at the lowest price possible," answers The Business Week, a magazine that studies business methods.

And why are A & P's prices so low? . . . "It buys direct from original producers, and makes every known short cut in distribution," says The Business Week.

Then, not satisfied with other people's say-so, Business Week digs into the official records of A & P's sales and profits, and by a simple sum in arithmetic gets the rest of the story—namely, that A & P keeps only 2½ cents of every dollar taken over its counter.

"Two-and-a-half cents profit is not Wall Street's idea of something to capitalize," says Business Week, explaining Wall Street's complete separation from so large a business enterprise as A & P. But it is A & P's idea of fair treatment of the housewife.

START now to win your share of the $1,500 in prizes . . . join in this fascinating TITLE HUNT through the Classified Ads! Thirty sets of ten Ripley pictures each will be published. The number of the above set appears in the upper left-hand corner. The first set appeared Sept. 7th. Back copies of the Sun-Telegraph, containing sets of Ripley pictures and descriptions or titles, may be secured at the Sun-Telegraph Building, Telegraph Square, or you may proceed according to Rule 8. Make your start in the TITLE HUNT today!

FIRST PRIZE, $250.00

Second Prize	150.00
Third Prize	75.00
Fourth Prize	50.00
Fifth Prize	25.00
25 Prizes at $10	250.00
100 Prizes at $5	500.00
100 Prizes at $2	200.00
Total (230 Cash Prizes)	$1,500

FOLLOW THESE RULES:

1—Everyone is eligible to participate in the Title Hunt except employes of the Sun-Telegraph and members of their families.

2—Every day from September 7 to October 6, inclusive, ten Ripley "Believe It or Not" pictures (without description) will be published in addition to the regular Ripley feature. The descriptions for each picture will be published in the Classified Ad columns.

3—The Title Hunt consists in finding the descriptions in the Classified Ads, clipping them out, and placing each under the picture to which it refers. The words making up each description will appear as a single unit in one place.

4—Hold all of the pictures until you have thirty complete sets of 10 each—300 pictures in all. Then send them in to Ripley's Title Hunt Editor, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, Telegraph Square, Pittsburgh, Pa.

5—All entries must be postmarked not later than midnight, October 31. No entries will be returned to the sender.

6—$1,500.00 in cash prizes, in accordance with the complete prize list published herewith, will be paid to the persons sending in the most nearly correct and neatest complete set of pictures at the close of the Title Hunt.

7—A committee of judges will be appointed by the Sun-Telegraph to determine the successful contestants. All entrants agree to accept the decisions of the judges as final. In cases of ties, a duplicate award will be given each tying contestant.

8—It is not necessary to purchase the Sun-Telegraph to compete. This newspaper may be examined at any of its offices or at the public libraries free of charge, and if you wish you may copy or trace the pictures as well as the descriptions from the Sun-Telegraph and then assemble the sets from the copies you have made.

Attractive Afternoon Frock
Pattern 1962
Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph 15c Practical Pattern

By ANNE ADAMS

For the theater, bridge or afternoon socials, nothing is daintier than a frock of printed crepe. This charming model has a graceful cape collar cleverly attached with crossed bands of the material, and a skirt flare attached in harmonizing points. The style is quite simple and extremely easy to make, yet unusually flattering to the wearer.

Pattern 1962 is charming made of flat or canton crepe, velvet or marocain. Black, brown and green grounds are very smart when printed with white, egg-shell, turquoise or orange designs. In a solid color, this model is equally lovely.

May be obtained only in sizes 16, 18, 20, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 3⅝ yards of 39-inch material.

No dressmaking experience is necessary to make this model with our pattern. Yardage for every size, and simple, exact instructions are given.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins carefully wrapped, or stamps, for each pattern. Write plainly your name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE WANTED.

MORNING PARADE:

A woman went into a five-and-ten-cent store and was charged 15 cents for a hair net.

"I thought this was a five-and ten-cent store," she rebelled.

"Just what it says," answered the proprietor. "Five and ten cents . . . simple mathematics, my woman."

The woman's Tom Thumb golf championship of NBC is claimed by Mae Hopple, contralto, heard in Enna Jettick Melodies, Armstrong Quakers and other programs. Miss Hopple recently played a difficult course in a little higher than half par.

CONTRAST

After calmly posing for several pictures on the ledge of the William Penn Hotel roof—27 floors above Sixth avenue—the "20 Fingers of Sweetness" balked at having to face a camera for a flashlight picture in KDKA studios Saturday.

Will someone please explain why femininity is not frightened, at the possibility of dropping ?? floors into the street, but shirks at the prospect of a small powder flash?

Nevertheless Leo Harris got the pictures. There's a way about him.

Graham McNamee is to sing for us at the Duquesne Garden Radio Show. Milton Cross, another headliner, has been announcing at WJZ for nine years.

DO YOU KNOW—

THAT WNBO at Washington, Pa., is planning to establish studios in Pittsburgh? The purpose is to team with a downtown theater group. The transmitter would remain in Washington.

THAT Ted Kaye is taking singing lessons? He plans to give up radio work this month.

THAT John Bosworth, who takes Mr. Kaye's place, is a West Virginia school teacher!

THAT Bill Hay seems to be more popular among Pittsburgh listeners than Amos and Andy? Bill is getting more votes in the Radio Poll.

THAT WWVA has been restrained from moving its station to Charleston, W. Va.? WGBU opposed the action and was upheld in court pending a review of the case.

THAT Claude Morris is not the least superstitious? We've seen him walk under a ladder, remain nonchalent after spilling salt, and light the third cigaret from the same match.

THAT the new Keystone Broadcasting Corporation is said to propose studios in the Good Gulf building if their 5,000-watt application is granted? It has been rumored for sometime that KDKA would have studios in this building; this has been denied by Percy Boyd, press relations.

Suffered Stomach Tortures Every Day

New Formula Acidine Brings Quick Relief

"You must know how much good Acidine has done me," says Miss Regina Freeman of Chicago, Illinois. "I suffered tortures with sour stomach, and heartburn every day, until I hardly knew what to do. Then I tried Acidine and it has done me a world of good. I find it the best remedy I have ever tried for colds, too." Acidine will help you too, because it is a scientific development entirely different from other remedies. Contains an effective digestant, Japtase, which promptly liquefies 400 times its own weight of starchy food, under proper conditions. Five other scientific ingredients neutralize burning acid, stop gas formation, soothe irritated stomach lining. No other remedy contains this scientific combination to end acid stomach troubles. More than two million people are already using new formula, Acidine, to relieve acid stomach troubles. They are enjoying new happiness and health because they can eat and drink what they want and enjoy a restful night's sleep afterwards. Get Acidine today. Watch pain and gas stop. Eat, drink and smoke what you want. Results guaranteed or money back. Get Acidine at your druggist or write Health Laboratories, Inc., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Staff of Arrangers. B. A. Rolfe Mighty. | Crack Radio Trains. Baffling Melodists.

By LOUIS REID

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—Among the unsung and unhonored men of radio are the arrangers who prepare the various musical programes which tumble unendingly out of the loudspeakers.

Louis Reid.

Many of the arrangers are on the payrolls of the dance orchestras. Competition is ever at a fever heat among them for 10 million restless feet are waiting. The demand is ever for the novel. New uses must be sought for the saxophone and accordion. An unusual drum beat may even have to be worked out to stamp a special interpretation of, say, "Thank Your Father" in the consciousness of the cuppers.

Of the various dance maestros, B. A. Rolfe has the largest staff of arrangers. He employes seven men who do nothing else but pour old musical wine into new bottles. Every Monday morning Rolfe sits with his arrangers about a large table much in the manner of a board of directors. Random thoughts on forthcoming programes are crystalized. What instruments are to be used—and how—are definitely decided.

Rolfe Among Mighty Of the Microphone

Rolfe has had his share of ups and downs in the amusement world. Radio has brought him new fame and fortune. He is now definitely allied with the microphone, a rich and rotund maestro who counts his public, if not his dollars, in the millions. Not so many years ago, as the bill posters reckon, he was preparing in company with Jesse Lasky, Paramount poohbah, tabloid musical comedies for vaudeville. The movies soon snared him and placed him temporarily on their pinnacle. He enjoyed his prominence for a few brief years when suddenly he found himself caught in one of those frequent readjustments of the film world.

A musician who came by his heritage naturally—his father, Albert B. Rolfe, is said to have organized the first dance orchestra 50 years ago in the little village of Brasher Falls, N. Y.—he turned his attention to radio, assembled a band as expert with the harmonica as with the harp and began to air the tunes that "made Broadway Broadway." The rest was easy. The conquest of the eardrums swift and complete. Today Rolfe sits among the mighty of the microphone.

The majority of the crack trains of the country are now equipped with radio, and passengers while gazing at contented cows and discontented farmers can now hear every type of programme available from agricultural talks to sither solos.

The New York Central, the Pennsylvania and the B. & O., our spies report, are still radioless. Perhaps, they are still working on the problem how they can best satisfy all their travelers. They may have learned that what is Beethoven to one man is boredom to another or they may be waiting until a definite ban is put on coloraturas absorbed in the Bird Song from "Pagliacci" or quartets warbling "Mandalay."

No attempt has ever been made on the radio, if we can believe our ears, to track down the origin of "Turkey in the Straw." The loudspeakers fail to convey all the excitement of which a bagpipe band is capable. Women may continue to say that of all waltzes they prefer Johann Strauss' "Beautiful Blue Danube" but their eyes light up most often to Victor Herbert's "Kiss Me Again."

The microphone mahatmas are no longer devoting so much attention, thank Allah, to the Toreador Song from "Carmen," the "Peer Gynt Suite," Rubenstein's Melody in F and the Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffman." The smell of campaign fireworks, as it affects the two old parties is again in the air.

Does New York Baffle The Melody Makers?

New York has yet to inspire the modern composers in a way that would cause a general dancing in the streets. Do the tunesmiths find the panorama too big, too baffling, too varied in its detail to work out a suitable theme? Many have tried. Many have even succeeded in catching something of the fascinating color, the bewildering drama of the town. John Alden Carpenter penned a musical ode in complicated harmony to the skyscrapers. Victor Herbert wrote a waltz song, "In Old New York," which was much too simple and saccharine to be anything more than a sentimental pause in a debutante's dream. The "Sidewalks of New York" was appropriate enough in its day as an expression of a youthful hurdy-gurdy civilization, but its day is long past.

TRIANGLE AND JUNGLE TAKE TURN ABOUT IN THE HARRIS

By CLARENCE E. GRUNDISH

A temperamental violinist plus a faithful wife plus an aristocratic man hunter equals "A Notorious Affair," the new talk film in the Harris.

Billie Dove, daughter of one of those elite English families, marries Basil Rathbone, poor violinist, and then has him stolen from her by that tricky vampire, Kay Francis.

Poor Violinist meets with success on concert stage, developes more temperament than Greta Garbo, trots off to Southern France with Other Woman Francis, meets with nervous breakdown and then, movie-like, discovers it's the little wife he really loves after all.

MEET THE ACTORS

Miss Dove is the alleged star. But it is Mr. Rathbone and Miss Francis who ring the bell when it comes to the acting. Mr. Rathbone registers well as the artist whose fingers caress a violin, but whose eyes go straying in the direction of feminine allurement. Miss Francis is effective as the enchantress who views every man with lustful look.

Kenneth Thomson, the former Pittsburgher (looking a little stouter and performing a little better), also is in the cast. He has the role of a physician, who almost turns an eternal triangle into a movie quadrangle.

GOLF IN THE JUNGLE

The picture doesn't amount to much as far as story and direction go. It is jumpy, spotty and needs the assistance of some silent titles to help clarify it.

An added feature on the bill is the newest jungle exhibition of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson. This is titled "The Land of the Head Hunters." The Johnsons play golf while great big lions go bounding about. Which impresses us not at all. However, the film has imprisoned some interesting incidents and photography.

SHAW AND MELODRAMA WILL OPEN NEW SEASON

The new Nixon season is to open Monday night, September 22, when the Theater Guild, Inc., will present Bernard Shaw's satire, "The Apple Cart," with original New York cast and production. The seat sale opened in the Nixon box office this morning.

The 1930-31 theatrical season in the Shubert Alvin will open Monday evening, September 22, with the mystery play, "Dracula," a dramatic version of Bram Stoker's novel of the same name. Seats are on sale now in the box office of the theater. Matinees will be given Wednesday and Saturday.

Opening tonight, "The Bachelor Father," will be the week's attraction in the Pitt, home of the George Sharp Players. John Winthrop, new character man, will be seen in the title role, which is the leading male part.

Things I Never Knew Till Now

That there is a restaurant in New York City with only one knife. It is a sandwich shop at 44th and Lexington.

That Scott, Byron and Talleyrand were all club-footed.

That Verdi composed the opera "Aida" for which he was paid 30 Gs, to be used at Cairo in celebrating the Suez Canal opening.

That in the domestic government of the American Indians the severest punishment inflicted upon a misbehaved child was to throw a dash of cold water into his face.

That Napoleon Bonaparte disliked being called Bonaparte. And that he could never learn to dance, the dope.

That the longest poem in existence is the East Indian epic "The Great War of Bharatas," containing 110,000 verses.

That "garbo," an Italian musical term, means "grace" or "elegance," which Greta certainly has a terrible mess of. "There he goes, the big illiterate." Ending a sentence with a PROPosition.

That it is a safe wager that even you never knew till now that the cuttle-fish looks exactly like the rock to which it clings.

That the expression "bang up" is found in Scott.

That it is a breach of Turkish etiquette to ask one's host if he will sell his house. "How much you want for your house, you Turk?"

That Jim Tyng, the famous catcher of the Harvard baseball nine in 1876, invented the mask used by catchers.

That to reform the manners of the Locrians, Zaleucus made a law that no free woman should be allowed more than one maid, to follow her—unless she were drunk. (Full of panther syrup).

That the next voyage of the Mayflower after transporting the Pilgs to America was to carry slaves from Africa to the E. Indies.

That although George Washington (you remember him!) was the owner of slaves, he never bought or peddled one.

That no mirrors were allowed in Queen Elizabeth's apts.

That one of Lowell's early lectures at Concord brought him the insignificant sum of five dollars.

That it took 12 yrs. to sell 500 copies of Emerson's "Nature."

That Cornishmen eat fish from the tail towards the head, to "bring other fishes' heads towards the shore."

That July and August have 31 days because of jealousy. They were named for Julius Caesar and his grand nevview, Augustus. Originally, July had 31 days and August only 30, but Augie was jelly of the extra tag in his uncle's month, so a day was robbed from Feb'y and placed in Aug.

That steel balls have more bounce than rubber ones.

That the weaving of tapestry, oil painting, the art of painting on glass, even pocket watches, and sun-dials were invented in the Netherlands, according to authorities on the subjects, so save your stamps.

That Edwin Forrest once walked down to the footlights and said to the audience: "If you don't applaud, I can't act."

That Sheridan's "Rivals" on its first appearance was damned.

That American Indians didn't paint their faces to look ferocious, but to express their feelings. Sky blue indicated he was peaceful; red, the color of war; black, of mourning. The amount of black paint was varied according to the nearness of the kin being mourned; a parent or mate called for black from brow to chin; a mere cousin or in-law for a few lines.

That the silver and gold in the U. S. coins aren't worth their face value. Now, how do you like knowing you're not so rich?

That the "Greatest Show on Earth" never played to as many persons as the Circus Maximus, in ancient Rome, which had seats for 260,000 persons—and filled 'em! Dispute that, Mr. Ringling!

That when the storks meet in Asia, he that comes in last is torn to pieces. Nope, I do not know why. It's just cuz!

That only one of Shelley's books, "The Cenci," went into a second edition, so cheer up, Mr. Mencken.

That you can win bets on this: We never see anything WHEN it happens. We see it AFTER it happens, because our seeing process requires light rays from objects or events must reach our orbs by reflection before we can see them. (I'm underpaid, demmit!)

And that Benjamin Franklin's grandest wisecrack was: Three can keep a secret—if two are dead!

Swanson's "Queen Kelly" Going to Europe as Silent Film

By HARRISON CARROLL.

(Copyright, 1930, Premier Syndicate.)

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 15.

Gloria Swanson's ill-fated "Queen Kelly" is to be seen after all.

It will be released abroad as a silent picture, Gloria says that she is cutting it now, and expects to have it ready for release within a short time.

"It can't pay for itself," she declares, "but I hope to get some of my money back. If I don't, 'Queen Kelly' will take most of my profits from 'The Trespasser'."

Gloria has an arrangement with United Artists that brings her 75 per cent of the next profits from her pictures. In addition to this she gets her one-seventh of the money from the distribution. The other six United Artists get the rest.

The star will not release Walter Byron, whom she first put under contract to play in "Queen Kelly." She says she's afraid to. Gloria once had Gloria Swanson John Boles under contract for two years and let him go just at the beginning of the talkies.

NIGHT-WORKER

Roland West, United Artists director, never works in the day time. His company starts arounn 6 p. m. and lays off around 2 or 3 a. m. West claims greater concentration is possible at night.

UNDER-SEA EPIC

Another under-sea story is to be made at Fox by John Ford, director of "Men Without Women."

The new submarine picture will be called "The Seas Beneath." Unlike the earlier Ford film, it will have a romance. Fox got its fill of heroine-less dramas with "Men Without Women." Despite the fact that this was a fine picture, it failed to draw feminine patrons to the boxoffice.

John Ford, by the way, has just finished a prison comedy "Up the River." The picture originally was intended to be serious, but along came "The Big House," and

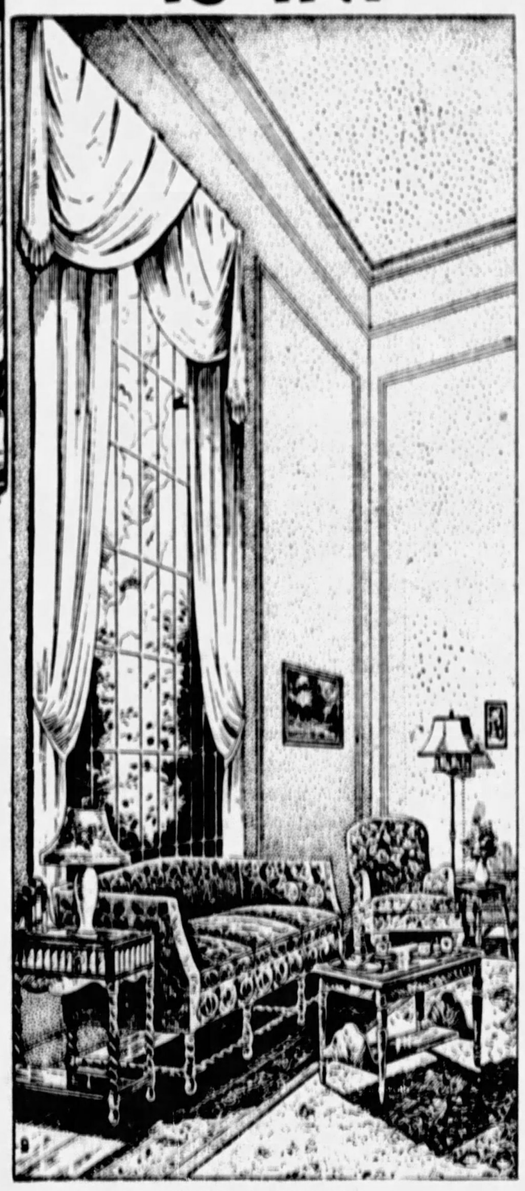
NATIONAL HOME FURNISHINGS STYLE SHOW

The Old Is OUT— THE NEW IS IN!



The old idea that the Queen Mary hat and wasp waist are in style is out of fashion—demoded—passe. The old idea that the Horsehair Sofa is a thing of beauty and a joy forever is also out. And, what is more pertinent, the antiquated idea that fashion in furniture is expensive is absolutely a false legend of the past. Pretty soon—September 26 to October 4—every home furnishings store, furniture store or department store stocking home furnishings will put on a style show. Right on their sales floors. You will want to see the new ensemble idea in furniture. You will want to learn what is what in proper home decoration. Attend these shows. And, above all, look carefully at the price tags. You'll agree that there can be low prices on fashionable furniture.

Cathie Eager to Impress Moore at Party

CHAPTER XIX.

There was to be a dinner party the night of Moore's arrival. The first since Cathie's marriage, unless she choose to count the painful dinners with Chester Farnsworth and his bride, and Cathie didn't.

She was very nervous about it.

"Now don't worry about the Vaughans," Mr. Farnsworth said reassuringly, "they'll be all right." He thought her nervousness was caused by the thought of the Vaughans, who had rather surprised him by accepting. They seldom went anywhere any more, but they were coming. So was a Mrs. Willoughby, whom Farnsworth had suggested as a pleasant partner for Moore.

"I thought it was Miss Darrow in the office whom he liked!" Cathie couldn't help that. It just slipped out.

Mr. Farnsworth did not even deign to answer. He merely raised his eyebrows, and returned to the evening paper.

"He did like her," Cathie persisted.

"Nonsense, Catherine."

Inquisitive
Cathie's Questions Disturb Her Husband

"What makes you think he'll like this Mrs. Willoughby, then?"

"Eh?"

"I said, what makes you think he'll like Mrs. Willoughby?"

"Oh. They're very good friends. She's P. T. Willoughby's widow."

Cathie took a few more stitches in the crepe de chine slip she was making for Jean. "Is she . . . an elderly lady?"

"No. Young; 25, 35. I don't know her age. Gracious, Catherine, why do you care? What's Mrs. Willoughby to you?"

"Nothing."

"Of course not. Now let me get back to my reading!" He rattled the sheets impatiently, but apparently he could not concentrate, for in a moment he let them slide to the floor and turned to Cathie worriedly. "Catherine, it isn't like you to be so fidgety. Is anything wrong? Are you unhappy?"

"I? Oh, no. No!"

"Something is wrong. You look tired, my dear. I wonder if you should see a doctor? Scammel is considered very good."

Cathie's face fell. "Oh, no. I'm all right. Perhaps I've worried about the dinner a little. It's my first, you know."

Reassured, Farnsworth returned once more to the financial page. "Then just leave everything to Cheong, and forget it," he advised.

Servants
Cheong Continues to Supervise

Cathie had no alternative in the matter. Cheong handled this, as other things, with a lordly hand. Long, sing-song instructions to the young Chinese boys. Now if she could just learn their names and give a few orders herself . . . but she was afraid to. Cheong might not like it, and she was really afraid to speak to him. She never could quite make up her mind when he was most impressive, stalking through the halls in his long white apron in the morning, or shuffling out of the house in his black alpaca coat and derby hat in the afternoon, bent on mysterious business of his own. He even ordered the flowers, sprays of golden brown chrysanthemums in the dining room, nasses of orange and lemon tinted marigolds for the drawing room.

She had planned to wear yellow. There was such a pretty maize chiffon with a faint pattern of young, tender green, that her husband liked so well. It made her look like a canary, he said, and he had given her his mother's canary diamond necklace to wear with it, though she knew he had first intended it for Enid, when he had had it removed from the bank and reset.

Fails
Makes Effort to Look Sophisticated

There had been one of those quiet, ugly battles over it, Chester making ugly, half joking remarks. It quite spoiled the necklace for Cathie. But she wore it dutifully, because it gave Mr. Farsworth pleasure to see it sparkling on her neck.

Tonight her yellow chiffon looked childish and immature to her. She wanted to look sophisticated, and matronly, for Gordon Moore. She wanted him to see that she had changed, that she was no longer the silly, gawky girl of a year ago. A trailing black lace gown would help to give that effect, she thought, and though it made her taller, by emphasizing her slimness, it failed in the effect she had hoped for. In reality, Cathie never looked more young and appealing than when she walked into the drawing room that night, her delicately moulded neck and arms milk-white against the black of her gown, her light brown hair, burnished from brushings as Marguerite's hands, curling into long, glittering waves that framed her small, lovely face.

Dinner
Conversation of Cathie And Gordon Interrupted

The Vaughans came first, Mr. Vaughan with his old world gallant politeness, Mrs. Vaughan frankly interested in nothing but finding the most comfortable chair. Having selected it she relapsed into comfortable dreaminess, her mauve panne skirt crawling steadily upward in front, disclosing black shiny k'd high laced shoes and white stockings.

Then Mrs. Willoughby, far too attractive for a woman of her age, Cathie thought resentfully, with her high coloring, her curly, brown hair, her creamy shoulders and the amber-tinted taffeta gown.

"Where's Moore? Isn't the boy here yet?" old Mrs. Vaughan came out of her trance to ask in a shaking treble.

"Upstairs, dressing. He arrived late," Cathie said, and then she added, she didn't know why: "None of us has seen him yet."

"Oh!" said Mrs. Willoughby, and Cathie thought there was a look of amusement in her long, greenish eyes.

When he did come, somewhat older, more unapproachable than she had remembered, in his dinner jacket, greetings and introductions and the announcement of dinner came too fast for them to have any word together. At the table he sat at Cathie's left hand, and she found herself feverishly postponing the talk that sooner or later they must have. But at last old Mrs. Vaughan, on her other side, turned to Mrs. Willoughby and Cathie let her eyes turn, ever so slightly, to her left.

Moore was watching her, his dark eyes twinkling.

And seeing him so near, so—so like he was before—Cathie's heart sank. It was going to be worse than she thought.

"I think I'll hang out my shingle and be a fortune teller," he was saying.

"And why?" But Cathie knew. Oh, she knew.

"Why? Don't you remember? The day we met, and you went taxi riding with me, and—"

"Oh, yes. Yes, of course. Surely you don't think I've forgotten. It was the most eventful day of my life!" she cried in a rush, remembering something somebody had told her long ago —"tell the truth in a loud voice if you don't want it known and nobody will believe it."

But he only smiled again. "I knew you hadn't forgotten it. It would have been too mean of you, after I've cherished that red lacquer tray you gave me—"

"You haven't kept it!"

"Absolutely. It's my most cherished possession. And did you keep my candy?"

"No—no—"

"The faithlessness of women!"

They were looking into each other's eyes, laughing easily, effortless, the way they had on that never-to-be-forgotten April day.

"You haven't changed!"

"Neither have you."

Warmth, radiance engulfed Cathie. She saw herself in his eyes, young, lovely, romantic in the candle light. She had forgotten the dinner party, forgotten her husband, forgotten everything but the dark, laughing man at her side.

As if from a long distance they heard Mrs. Willoughby's voice, challenging, barbed with scornful amusement:

"Gordon, dear, I ASKED how long business would keep you in town?"

STAR LOANED

With her signature fresh on a new five-year Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract, Leila Hyams is to go to Fox to play opposite Edmund Lowe in a golf comedy that goes under the cryptic title of "Shepper Newfounder."

Leila Hyams

This apparently disposes of the rumor that she was to be the lead in "The Great Meadow."

One of the principal characters in "Shepper Newfounder" is a caddie, and Tommy Clifford will play him. You'll recall Tommy as the Irish lad in John McCormick's picture, "Song of My Heart."

DO YOU KNOW that Will Rogers makes a daily trip to the telegraph office to personally file his syndicated newspaper column?

ANOTHER WESTERN

Westerns are the rage in Hollywood now, just as musicals and underworld stories were a short while back.

Nick Grinde is preparing to direct "The Shepherd of Guadalupe" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. This is a story by the dependable Zane Grey.

As in all of M-G-M's other westerns, Cliff Edwards will be a comic troubadour in this picture. There's also talk of Johnny Mack Brown playing the masculine lead, but this is mainly words to date.

A LARGE ORDER

When R-K-O scenarists compiled all of Edna Ferber's descriptive passages on Yancey Cravat, hero of "Cimarron," they laid out a large order for Richard Dix.

Richard Dix

Miss Ferber pictures her hero as "vital, charming, brilliant, a spread-eagle enigma, cool, steely, debonair, brave, handsome, a person with an amazing speed of mind and muscle, an amazing ability to meet all men with equal grace, a man constantly in the grip of conflicting forces that swayed his nature beyond his control, a man temperamentally unable to become a part of the fixed human machine, man driven by Columbus-like urge of the pioneer, a Ulyssus in modern attire." Aside from that, Mr. Dix can just relax.

Bellevue Considers Halloween Fete

Plans for a Halloween celebration will be discussed at the monthly meeting of the Bellevue Board of Trade, tomorrow night. A report of the business men's committee is expected to be made favoring the proposed $50,000 borough bond issue for a recreation park near the new Jack's Run Bridge, and enlargement of the present swimming pool in Ralph Park. J. W. Vickerman is president of the board.

Jobbers Convene At Westinghouse

More than 100 jobber salesmen of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company convene here today for a three-day conference in the East Pittsburgh works. They represent the wholesale distributing centers east of the Rocky Mountains.

T. J. Pace, director of sales, and O. F. Stroman, manager of the motor apparatus department, are in charge.

PEACE URGED BY MORROW

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(AP.)—A plea for sympathetic understanding between nations was voiced last night by Ambassador Dwight W. Morrow in a radio speech from Mexic City. The address was brought to New York by wire and broadcast by the National Broadcasting System.

Morrow praised the charm of Mexico and its people. He then spoke of the improvement in the means of communication between the two nations, but said:

"It is too often assumed that scientific inventions prevent misunderstanding. Machines, however, do not understand each other. Man may make a perfect machine but it will still depend upon man himself whether the machine shall be an instrument of understanding or misunderstanding.

"If we would all get clearly into our minds that other men have as much pride in the dignity of their nations as we have in our own, the solution of international problems would be less difficult."

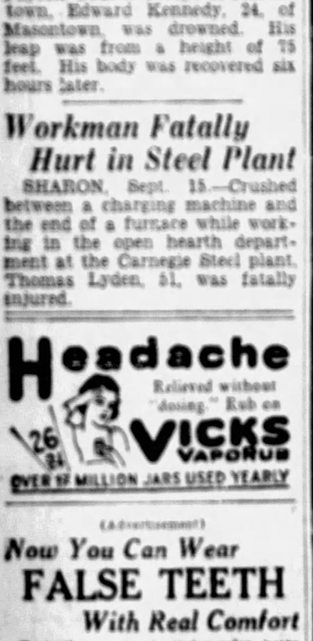
Pittsburgh Resident, Victim of Severe Stomach Ailment, Finds Relief in New Medicine

Medicines, like men, are known for their deeds, not for the claims that are made for them.



MR. HARRY L. SHERIDAN

Konjola, the new and different medicine, is compounded of 32 ingredients and 22 of these are the juices of roots and herbs. It attacks ailments of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and rheumatism, neuritis and nervousness at their source. The experience of Mr. Harry L. Sheridan, 517 Burgess street, Pittsburgh, is but one of many with which the Konjola Man at the Dow drug store, Penn avenue and Sixth street, Pittsburgh, is familiar. See him there at the first opportunity. Mr. Sheridan recently gave the Konjola Man his statement as follows:

"I suffered from stomach trouble for a long time. I bloated badly after meals and no matter how careful I was of my choice of food I still suffered afterward. I did not sleep well and rolled and tossed about at night. My nerves were badly shot and I was discouraged.

"Friends urged me to try Konjola and I finally gave this new medicine a chance. It began to benefit me almost from the very beginning. The first thing I noticed was that I slept well at night. When I arose in the morning I felt refreshed and full of energy. My stomach is now in excellent condition and my nerves are calm and quiet. Konjola made me feel like another man and I can never say enough in praise of this great medicine."

Konjola is free from alcohol, nerve-deadening drugs or heart depressing chemicals. It is all pure medicine and can be used by all the family.

The Konjola Man is at the Dow drug store, Penn avenue and Sixth street, Pittsburgh, where he is meeting the public daily. Konjola is sold also at all Dow drug stores in Pittsburgh and vicinity.

POLITICIANS TAP 14TH WARD PURSES

SIDE WALKS of PITTSBURGH

By WILLIAM PFARR

Jesse Conner wrote poetry and, like all poets, had one ambition; he wanted to see his works published in a volume. Mr. Conner was a government employe, associated with D. B. Heiner, the income tax collector, in the Federal Building. Mr. Conner wrote of his colleagues, of his birthplace (Bridgeville) and of the rural scene. He died two years ago and now, as a tribute to him, his family has published "Musings and Dreams," by Jesse Conner, which contains many of his poems.

Mark Egan, convention manager of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, likes exercise. One such outlet is riding. Mr. Egan rides a horse daily along the circuitous bridle path in Schenley Park. A few Sundays ago his colleague, Donald J. Howard, community affairs manager of the Chamber, invited Mr. Egan to the Howard home in Altoona. Sunday morning Egan arose early, slipped into his riding habit and was prepared to explore the wonders of Altoona on a horse. But he didn't. Neither he nor Mr. Howard could find a horse.

The next time your grandchild crawls up to your lap and asks for a story that'll scare him, tell him about the Molly Maguires. It was in the 1880's that the Mollies organized in various parts of Pennsylvania, but especially in the Scranton hard-coal region. The Mollies were miners who wanted better working conditions and they were accused of countless murders. In Pittsburgh, when a man became obstreperous, his employer described him as another Molly.

The Mollies were blamed for murdering their mine bosses time and again, and legend, if not truth, has it that eventually they reached into politics and installed their own candidates in many offices. The Maguires were broken up when private detectives, joining the Mollies as killers, turned up the evidence. Eleven of the more successful Mollies—called "Molly of the Mollies"—were hanged.

Sir:

There is a woman in a suburb of Pittsburgh who has a parrot which likes beer. Anytime beer happens to be served in the house, the parrot recognizes the bottle or the odor and cries out, "How about a drink, how about a drink?" His mistress then allows him to sip a glass, and then he starts swearing like a trouper. No fooling. Well, not much fooling.

JAKE.

A man told us a story the other day about a dog named Rowdy. Rowdy is "jest dog," as the forgotten Moran and Mack would have it. A few months ago, none too clean, he ambled up to the home of two East End ladies and their sympathy was so great that they took him in. They bathed and fed him and he took on an appearance. In fact he laid aside the docility which was his in humbler days and became the cock o' the walk.

Other dogs in the neighborhood he chased, but let one turn on him and, coward that he was, he would himself flee. Well, the man who told us this story said the dog was just like a human being—give a human being an inch and he'll take a yard. We didn't argue the point because the drought was on.

Will Rogers Says:

CAMP RICHARDSON, Cal., Sept. 15.

To the Editor of the Sun-Telegraph:

Me and my friend Arthur Brisbane can't seem to get together on Russia. There are a thousand things I talk about that I don't know any more about than a senator, but I did take an airplane three years ago and flew from London to Moscow and Leningrad, stayed there a couple of weeks, went with no delegation, and wasn't personally conducted, saw everything, didn't even belong to a Hoover committee, and I don't know any more now about Russia than Brisbane does. If I wanted to start an insane asylum that would be a hundred per cent cuckoo, I would just admit applicants who thought they knew something about Russia.

Yours, WILL.

ASK HIGH CURB FOR ROAD

Officials of the Pittsburgh Motor Club have asked City Council to erect a high curb along the Noblestown road from Crafton boulevard to West End, where a menace exists to motorists.

The club estimates that 10,000 automobiles pass along this road daily, since it is the west outlet for the Lincoln and William Penn Highways, and is one of the most congested roads in this section of the state.

Recently the City Department of Public Works erected several hundred feet of high curb along the road, but several dangerous curves and long stretches on the hill are still unguarded, except for flimsy fences, the club pointed out.

LUCAS MURDER STILL BAFFLES

Not a single clue had been uncovered by county detectives today in their investigation of the murder of a man believed to be Paul Lucas, 35, alleged gambler, of First street, Ambridge, whose bullet riddled body was found in a hollow in Sewickley Township Friday night.

The detectives enlisted the aid of Beaver County authorities in the belief that the victim might have been slain there and his body dumped out in Allegheny County.

PARIS TRIP SPURS ALL ELIGIBLES

Special Guides, Visits to Many Historical Spots, Hotels Arranged for Tour

Gloria Swanson's generous offer to give a girl reader of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph a free de luxe tour to Paris, all expenses paid and extra money to spend, has all the eligible girls living in the reading area of this newspaper thrilled with excitement.

In fact they are none the less excited about the five additional trips to Bermuda that the Sun-Telegraph is giving away.

TRIPS IN DECEMBER

All of these trips will be made in December. The girl who goes to Paris will sail on the French liner "Paris," on which much of Gloria Swanson's new picture "What A Widow!" was filmed. This girl will have a complete week in Paris, live at the best hotels, special guides, have visits to the historic spots—just a big round of "going" for seven days.

The girls who get the Bermuda awards will have first class steamship accommodations, the best hotels and a week among the sights of the most picturesque islands in the Atlantic Ocean.

For the purpose of a fair distribution in the award of these free de luxe trips, the classes of workers to whom the awards will eventually be made have been divided into five groups. There is to be one girl more fortunate than all the others in these five groups. She will get the Gloria Swanson trip to Paris. The trips to Bermuda, however, will be awarded so that one trip, all expenses paid, will be awarded to each group.

NEW ENGINES BAN SMOKE

Clearer air for Pittsburgh is said to be in sight as railroads experiment with smokeless electric generating switch engines in railroad yards here. With two new switching engines, one with a gasoline motor and the other with a Diesel motor, now in service, a stride, it is admitted, has been taken towards overcoming the smoke pall arising from non-electrified yards.

With manufacturers of both engines ready to put them into production, a distinct lessening of the smoke nuisance in Pittsburgh is in sight if railroads decide they are practicable for regular switching service.

Authorities do not predict the use of either Diesel or gasoline motor driven engines for heavy or fast through freight and passenger use for some years. The Diesel motor, it is explained, is still too heavy per horsepower to be installed in large locomotives; the possibilities of the gasoline motor are, as yet, not thoroughly known.

Both engines are in use in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Pittsburgh yards.

Master Mysteries

By ARTHUR HOERL

CHAPTER I.

The last section of the Sunday edition was safely "in bed" and Robin Dale was still browsing about in the reportorial room of the Daily Journal. He saw Pop Beacon knock the ashes from his pipe, stretch his arms and yawn, and then reach for the shapeless old black felt that hung on a nail in the wall behind him. Dale was still trying to decide whether to go to O'Reilly's flat and take a whirl at the pasteboards, or drop in at Bertheimer's "speak" and look over the poison, or be sensible and go home to bed.

To help him out in the dilemma the telephone bell rang, and arranged something else entirely. It was Sergt. Jardin.

"'Lo, sarge . . . what do you do, sit up all night waitin' for someone to commit a crime?"

Then he listened for a few moments. From the corner of his eye he saw Pop Beacon easing off.

"Pop! Listen to this! . . ." Dale turned his attention to the telephone again . . . "All right, sarge, I'll be there right away. Thanks!" Dale hung up.

Pop Beacon had hurried to Dale's desk. He sniffed news. Dale paused to light a cigaret, which made Pop a little impatient.

"What do you know about the Adairs, up in Croton, Pop?"

"What do you want to know for? Come on, I want to get home, you all-night hound."

"One of the sons, young Bob, has been murdered."

"Going up?"

"Sure!"

"Well, it's a crazy family . . . no use telling you anything about 'em; you'll see it for yourself when you get there. There's a whole tribe of 'em live together in a mansion overlooking the river. I was up there once when the old man was holding out on the city because they needed some of the Adair land for the water system. Old Dedrick Adair held out until they took it to the Supreme Court. It's a queer place, boy, an old, grim house that makes you think of Count Dracula's den, and you expect to see them walking soft-footed around the place without throwing any shadows. You wouldn't believe it until you see it. You're welcome to the experience, boy . . . but it ought to make a whale of a story if your nerves stand up under it."

"You encourage me, Pop, to a beautiful crop of gooseplmples. Won't I have Jardin in a nice frame of mind by the time we get to Croton!"

Jardin was waiting outside Police Headquarters when Dale drove up and they proceeded in Dale's taxi to Captain Blake's home, where a police car was waiting. All the way to Croton, Dale fed the shivery stuff to Jardin, enlarging profusely on the little information Pop Beacon had given him.

It had somewhat the effect of a boomerang when the car stopped near the entrance to the Adair estate. The grounds were surrounded by a high brick wall and heavy iron swinging gates extended across the driveway and shut off any possible intrusion. In the early morning mist from the river the house squatted like a huge, vague horned toad over which the tall, gaunt trees stood like ghosts with skinny, outstretched arms. After a bell at one of the entrance posts was sounded two or three times lights appeared in two of the upper windows, as though the eyes of the toad had unblinked and was staring at them.

The wind swept through the branches, which were already stripped by early Autumn's blasts, and the hoot of an owl sounded like a strangling human's screech. Robin Dale buttoned his coat tighter about him and felt a shiver run over his body. Then, suddenly, a glare of light issued from the house, radiating the mist in every direction like a spider's web. The mystic glow of light came nearer and there loomed into view with it a shambling human form, bent over and sinister, like a ghost on a nightly prowl.

"Who's there?" came a voice in a deep, reverberating tone.

"The police!" Captain Blake spoke.

"What do you want?" asked the sepulchural voice.

"Someone telephoned that there's been a murder."

"Murder? There's no murder been done here. Go away!"

"Will you open the gate or do we have to force it?"

"You're mad . . . there's no telephone in the house . . . go away and leave us in peace."

"Open that gate!"

"Unbeliever!"

The gate screeched as it swung back on rusted hinges. Captain Blake went through with Jardin, Dr. Wattles and Dale. The ghostly form came last, throwing the hurrying forms into grotesque moving shadows as they crossed the grounds and went up the porch of the old mansion. Into the dimly-lit hallway they continued. There, near the foot of a narrow, carpeted stairway leading into the second floor, stood a file of strangely assorted figures. The man with the lantern entered last and shut the door behind him, leaving the lantern still aflame, so that it threw an upward sheen upon the faces of those who stood in grim silence near the stairs.

An old lady, with piercing black eyes, hair drawn tightly about her head, hair of mottled gray, and sharp aquiline features, was the first to speak.

"I am Augusta Adair," she said in a voice which penetrated like the friction of steel upon glass. "Why have you thus entered our abode uninvited?"

Capt. Blake explained again about the telephone call.

With a piercing glance the old lady surveyed those standing beside her and then to the figure with the lantern, speaking to him first.

"Belfridge, did you telephone?"

The man merely shook his head. She turned to the young woman next to her, a pretty, sad-faced girl with hair as blonde as autumn wheat.

"Wife of Belfridge, was it you?"

The timid one, cringing against the stairs, shook her head. The old lady turned to the next one, a counterpart of herself, only younger, scarce 30 possibly, although she appeared 40.

"You, Suzanna Adair?" Suzanna shot back a piercing gleam and shook her head.

Then, suddenly, from above came piercing, prolonged shrieks of laughter, like the outburst of some maniac, shattering the silence in the hallway.

TWO WILL QUIT SYNOD OFFICES

The Rev. Dr. Ellis B. Burgess, of Crafton, and the Rev. P. H. R. Mullen, of Swissvale, will retire as officers of Pittsburgh Synod, United Lutheran Church, tomorrow at a meeting of the executive committee in the Henry Hotel. Dr. Burgess has been president of the body for 10 years, and Dr. Mullen was secretary for five years. The Rev. H. H. Bagger, of Butler, becomes president and the Rev. F. W. Ash, of Penn and Ligonier, becomes secretary. Induction of the president will be tomorrow night in the First Lutheran Church. Dr. Burgess has accepted the superintendency of the Metropolitan Missions of the United Synod of New York, and will move there.

Crushed by Street Cars, Shifter Dies

Crushed between two street cars being shifted at the Ingram carbarn of the Pittsburgh Railways Company where he was employed as a shifter, John Coyne, 24, of 619 Fifth avenue, Carnegie, was killed instantly early today, according to a company's report. Death was due to a fracture of the skull, attaches of the coroner's office said.

WOMAN FACES DEATH QUIZ

A woman witness in the mysterious murder of Meyer Hymovitz, 24, who was shot on the night of September 2 while in company with his wife, Bertha, in Reservoir Park, Herron Hill, was to be questioned by homicide squad detectives today.

From this witness, whose identity they refuse to divulge until she is grilled, the sleuths hope to clear the slaying of Hymovitz who was reported to have been shot while running to the aid of his wife after she was molested by a Negro. The widow of the victim and her brother, Nathan Tombofsky, of 3422 Milwaukee street, have been held in Central Station without bail since their arrest four days ago when detectives announced they discredited Mrs. Hymovitz's story of the slaying.

FUND TO BUY 'BOSS' AUTO DEMANDED

Merchants Warned They May 'Need a Favor Some Day' In Gouge for Testimonial

Solicited with the slogan, "you may need a favor some day," merchants of Squirrel Hill have been asked to contribute to a fund which will purchase a new straight-eight sedan for the Republican committee chairman of the Fourteenth Ward, Patrick Casey.

Just what favors they may need is puzzling the merchants of a ward that is classed as "uncontrolled," and whose politics have not been trampled upon by factional steam-rollers.

To what extent the merchants feel that "they may need a favor" from Mr. Casey has not been determined. They have been asked to name the amount of their contribution and hand over the cash next Wednesday night at a meeting in the El Tower Hotel, Munhall road.

CITY EMPLOYES TOUCHED

Residents of the district on the city payroll who have obviously obtained the "favor they may need someday," also have been asked to contribute to the fund for the ward boss, who is also a deputy sheriff.

Prominent among those on the city payroll in the Fourteenth Ward is James M. Clark, although it could not be learned last night whether the safety director had been asked to contribute.

The purses of the Squirrel Hill merchants have already been "touched" for a testimonial for Lieut. Philip Rumph, formerly a patrolman in that ward.

TO REPLACE DINNER

The clique behind the plan to buy the automobile could not be definitely established, for the project is well-concealed beneath a labyrinth of committees and sub-committees.

The purchase of the machine is supposed to replace the customary banquet.

To quote Thomas Hasley, of Forward avenue, a district committeeman of the Fourteenth Ward:

"Yes, we are arranging a little testimonial gift for Mr. Casey. A dinner was given to the Mayor and we presented a little gift to Lieut. Kumph, and I think it is only proper that we should do something for our ward chairman."

South Side Man, 70, Hangs Self by Whip

Using a whip cord for a noose, Frank Poczwardowski, 70, of 165 Pius street, hanged himself in his home yesterday, the coroner's office reported. South Side police, summoned by members of his family, cut the noose and took the man to the South Side Hospital, where he was pronounced dead. No reason could be learned for his act.

Howard Street Man Beaten and Robbed

Frank Schilling, 40, of 2430 Howard street, today was recovering from a beating received, he said, from four men who slugged and robbed him of a small amount of money near his home last night, according to a report to police. The holdup men escaped after the officers fired a shot at them, it was said.

Bethany Class To Open Season

The Bethany Bible class of the Bellevue Christian Church, will hold its first meeting of the fall season tomorrow night in the church rooms. The committee in charge includes Mrs. Gertrude Miller, Mrs. Ella Simpson, Mrs. George Taylor, and Mrs. Albert Kuester. Mrs. F. D. Sutter is class president and F. J. Riebel instructor.

Sheraden Man Hit By Mystery Bullet

West End police today were investigating the shooting of John Wasel, 35, of 425 Parson street, Sheraden, who was wounded in the hip while walking near his home yesterday. Wasel, treated at the South Side Hospital and then taken home, told police, they said, that he apparently was a victim of a stray bullet.

OPEN JURY QUIZ ON 'LOST' JUDGE

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(INS.)—An official attempt to fathom the strange disappearance of Supreme Court Justice Joseph F. Crater started today when District Attorney Crain presented to the county grand jury the testimony of friends of the missing jurist.

The investigation, in which evidence was taken behind closed doors, resulted from an order declaring illegal the John Doe proceedings first proposed by Crain. After Chief Magistrate Corrigan had made this ruling, Crain decided upon his own investigation.

Meanwhile, police continued to run down new clues, although scores of tips since the justice was last seen, August 6, had proved false leads.

MAN, WIFE HELD IN KNIFE FRAY

William Brown, 34, and his wife, Martha, 27, Negroes, of 237 Brereton avenue, today were being held by police in connection with the stabbing of John Walters, 40, also a Negro, of Perry street, according to police.

Police alleged Walters was stabbed in the neck during a fight in the rear of the Brown home. The victim was taken to the West Penn Hospital. The arrest of the couple followed.

Pershing Accepts War Givers' Names

Gen. John J. Pershing in a letter today to John J. Burke, city office manager of county parks, acknowledged the receipt of a volume containing the names of the members of the "Pershing Limit Club," a body composed of 5,000 persons each of whom during the World War purchased $1,000 or more in War Savings Stamps. Mr. Burke was executive secretary of the club.

Hazelwood Man Falls off Porch

Falling from a second floor porch to the yard, a man thought by West Homestead police to be Thomas Decoursie, 27, of Lytle street, Hazelwood, was in a critical condition today at the Homestead Hospital. The accident occurred, police said, while Decoursie was visiting at the home of friends in 815 Forest avenue, West Homestead, last night.

Camera Question Box

Today's question: Dean Inge, of London, advocates two kinds of marriages—the one "until death do us part" and the other for a limited time. Do you think the suggestion a good one?

Ross Matlack

ROSS MATLACK, office assistant, Crafton: No I don't. People who want to get married should be willing to spend the rest of their lives together or else not marry at all.

Geo. C. Couch

GEORGE C. COUCH, clerk, South Hills: I think the old-fashioned marriages — "until death do us part"—are the only kind to have, although the other kind should be recognized by the government too.

Wm. Kalmbach

WILLIAM KALMBACH, clerk, North Side: That suggestion isn't any good at all. When two people want to get married they are either in love enough to stay married always, or else they aren't in love at all.

Julius Golian

JULIUS GOLIAN, clerk, Woods Run: There should only be one kind of marriage. When the marriage is limited to a certain length of time then I don't think it should be classed as a marriage.

Miss Norwood

MISS DOROTHY NORWOOD, secretary, Squirrel Hill: I think that limited marriages would ruin the next three generations because there are too many people who are ready to take advantage of such a proposition.

F. W. Brown

F. W. BROWN, clerk, North Side: The old-fashioned kind of marriage is the only kind to have, I think. These others that people get enthused about are just like fads and they wear out soon.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Mary L. Craig.

BEAVER FALLS, Pa., Sept. 15.—Funeral services for Mrs. Mary Louthan Craig, 91, widow of John C. Craig, were to be held today from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Homer H. Swaney, Patterson Heights. Mrs. Craig, a member of a pioneer family, was born in South Beaver township. She was a member of the United Presbyterian church. She leaves her daughter, three sons, Charles R., Warren, O., Simon H., New York City, and William S. Craig, Greensburg; three sisters, Mrs. J. N. Hartzel, Cape Girardeau, Mo., Mrs. T. B. Bradshaw, South Beaver township, and Mrs. J. R. Patterson, Beaver Falls; two brothers, Dr. J. S. Louthan, Beaver Falls, and John R. Louthan, South Beaver township.

Andrew Tucci.

Funeral services for Andrew Tucci, 42, proprietor with A. Conforti, of the Nixon Cafe, who died Saturday in the South Side Hospital, will be held Tuesday from his home, 237 Morrison avenue, Mt. Lebanon. Burial will be in Calvary Cemetery. Mr. Tucci was born in Italy and came to Pittsburgh 25 years ago. He was a member of St. Bernard's Catholic Church, Mt. Lebanon. He leaves his widow, Mrs. Sophie Tucci; two daughters, Rose and Lillian Tucci, all at home; two brothers, Genaro and Jack Tucci, of Philadelphia, and a sister, Mrs. Rose Cancilla, of Knoxville.

Mrs. Henry Marnhout.

Funeral services for Mrs. Flora Marnhout, wife of Henry Marnhout, who died Saturday, will be held tonight in the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. J. Eaton, Cliff Mine road, near Coraopolis. Burial will be private in Clinton Cemetery tomorrow morning. Besides her husband, Mrs. Marnhout leaves two daughters, Mrs. Eaton and Mrs. H. P. Thornton, of Pittsburgh; two sons, Frank and Dee Marnhout, of Coraopolis; a brother and 12 grandchildren.

George E. Klingelhofer.

George E. Klingelhofer, president of the Pittsburgh Bridge and Iron Works, died at his home in Park Mansions last night, following a heart attack. He was a member of the First Lutheran Church and of the Duquesne Club, the Pittsburgh Athletic Association, the Keystone Athletic Club and the Edgewood Country Club. He also was interested in the American Institute of Steel Construction, having been a director of the organization. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Regina Klingelhofer; two sons, Edward and Louis, both active in the company headed by their father, and a daughter, Evaline.

Brother Patrick McFall.

Brother Patrick McFall, 74, died Saturday in the infirmary of St. Vincent's Archabbey, Latrobe. Brother McFall was born in County Antrim, Ireland, and had lived in Pittsburgh since coming to this country. He was made an oblate of the Holy Name Society in 1926 and made his religious profession in 1928. He was a member of St. Peter's Church, North Side. He leaves one sister in Ireland.

Industrial Home Inmate Dies, Pal Injured; Trolley, Four Autos Tangle, Girl Cut

Four killed and eight injured was the toll today of automobile accidents in the Pittsburgh district over the week-end.

Fred Crawford, 17, of East Brady, Pa., an inmate of the Boys' Industrial Home at Oakdale, was killed when a truck he and Samuel Hilling, 17, another inmate, took from the home garage, crashed into a pole, according to the coroner's report.

The two boys were said to have been left in charge of the home's livestock while other inmates went to church. After feeding and watering the stock they took the truck, neither knowing how to drive, Deputy Coroner R. D. Newman said.

Max Kaufman, 54, of 828 Mellon street, died in the Montefiore Hospital several hours after he had been struck by an automobile at Murray and Phillips avenues. Louis Pamell, 20, of 7716 Bennett street, alleged driver of the car, was arrested.

IDENTIFY VICTIM

The body of a man killed by a truck at Water and Short streets Saturday night, was partially identified as that of David Prendergrast, 65, of Hazelwood, morgue attaches reported. The victim suffered a fractured skull.

Joseph Anzerchak, 28, of 210 Bessmer avenue, was killed and Alex Smernoss, 18, a hitch-hiker whom he had given a lift, was injured, near Trafford City when their auto ran against an embankment and overturned, according to a police report.

When an automobile in which they were riding collided with another machine on the Pittsburgh road near Canonsburg yesterday, Betty Lee, of 119 Fifth street, Aspinwall, and Mildred Sheets, of Canonsburg, were injured, police reported. The two young women were riding in a car operated by Joseph Chiado, of 75 Reed street, police said.

FIND RUM CARGO

In the tie-up of traffic another car, approaching at high speed according to police reports, swerved off the road and overturned. The driver fled when he was unable to start the machine after it had been righted. Search of the machine revealed 60 gallons of moonshine to State Highway Patrolman L. R. Seloni.

Possible fractures of the neck and right shoulder were suffered by Mrs. Sarah Piper, 53, of 34 Whiteside road, when her head struck the roof of an automobile driven by A. Goldstein, of 2460 Bates street, as the machine struck a rough spot at South Twenty-second and Mary streets, yesterday. She is in St. Joseph's Hospital.

TROLLEY HITS AUTO

A child was injured, four automobiles damaged and a score of passengers in a Mt. Lebanon street car were shaken up when the trolley struck a machine at West Liberty and Cape May avenues, yesterday. The car, inbound, crashed into the rear of an automobile driven by George Cotts, of 296 Prospect avenue, Ingram, pushing it about 200 feet, it was said.

Cott's car struck one driven by Paul Harper, Jr., of 310 Wainbell street, Dormont, which in turn struck the automobile of A. S. Fraime, of 265 Castle Shannon road. Fraime's machine was hurled against one driven by Frank Greiner, of 1114 Liverpool street, Nine-year-old Dorothy Louise Hyatt, who was in Fraime's car, suffered bruises and was treated by a nearby physician.

JURORS CHOSEN TO TRY GARDEN

Selection of jurors began today in Criminal Court for the trial of James Garden, Clairton grocer, charged with the murder of Sam Lai, 35, of Clairton, last July 5.

The state contends that Garden, objecting to the noise of a toy cannon which a group of men were firing near his home, shot into the crowd from his window, the bullet entering Lai's chest. Lai died in the McKeesport Hospital.

The defense will be that Garden did not shoot to kill and that he intended to fire over the heads of the men, merely to scare them.

HUNT DIXMONT FUGITIVE

Police today were searching for Joseph Markz, 24, an inmate of the Dixmont Hospital for the Insane, who escaped from the institution last night. Markz was working about the yard when last seen by hospital attaches, police were told.

Police were requested to make an intensive search, as Markz's mental condition was such as make his liberty unsafe, according to a hospital report.

Sheraden Women to Tell At Roll Call Where They Spent Summer

The clean-cut looking year book always put out by the Sheraden Woman's Club has made its appearance, bearing the familiar daisy-ringed gold and white monogram on its cover. President's day, so the book says, will be held on October 3 and in order that each woman may know what her fellow members have been doing, each will tell in response to roll call where she spent her vacation. With papers on quilts and samplers, the club is to have an "Art in Industry" program at the meeting a fortnight later, and at a third October session will hear five-minute papers on various features of "Progressive Pittsburgh."

Mrs. W. H. Parrish will tell of her experiences at Oberammergau and "Sheraden Yesterday and Today" will be discussed by two of the members—this in November. Shakespeare's "noises, sounds and sweet airs" would make an appropriate caption for the December 12 meeting, when "On the Wings of the Wind," "Tuning In" and "A Peep In" are the assigned topics. A charm talk completes 1930 and the club will begin the new year with president's day, going on to discussion of "My Favorite Magazine and Why," then an evening meeting at which club husbands will be guests and the Rev. Dr. Carl Wallace Petty the speaker.

"Why I am Thankful I Live Where I Do" is the just-a-little-different-title by which the February 20 meeting is designated, and under which three of the members will have papers on the United States, Pennsylvania and Pittsburgh. An all-day sewing, a sale for the blind, a spring musicale, the annual election, an address by Dr. J. Freeman Guy, the annual meeting and a May breakfast, which is a departure from the regulation luncheon, complete the year.

Monday Club

Mrs. W. H. Roberts, a charter member, will be hostess for the opening meeting of the Carnegie Monday Club next Monday, a meeting at which the new executive, Mrs. W. W. Booth, will accept the gavel from her predecessor, Mrs. P. W. Heck and the year book will be sketched by Mrs. N. L. Glasser, program chairman.

The new books, familiar in their green and gold covers, foretell a year of good things for the members—a program on Australia, president's day (October 20), a talk on the Passion Play by William Woodall, son of one of the members, a travel talk by Mrs. W. H. Parrish, who has been abroad since April; an afternoon devoted to study of the South Seas, another to explorers and explorations, and a still later one to writers, four of whom, Margaret Deland, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Willa Cather and Elizabeth Moorhead, are either Pittsburghers or have had Pittsburgh contracts—all these in 1930.

During the last half of the season the members will be regaled with studies of "The Man and His Contribution," featuring Edward Bok, Elbert Hubbard, John Brashear and George Eastman; a program of book reviews; discussion of plays and motion pictures, of women and peace, of "Progressive Pittsburgh" of current events, both domestic and foreign and a lecture by the Rev. Dr. E. C. McCown.

The annual luncheon, a Mother's Day program, a memorial service, the annual Memorial Day dinner for the G. A. R. and the June luncheon are other events scheduled.

Flower Show

If "it takes love to grow flowers" as William L. Treager, county agricultural agent, told the Ligonier Woman's Club, Ligonier must have watered its gardens with love this summer, for an eight-week drought almost caused the club to cancel its annual flower show. In fact, the cancellation stood for two days, but a flood of inquiries caused the town beautiful committee to reconsider and the show was held in the Fort Ligonier Hotel Saturday and yesterday.

If Ligonier Valley can raise such gorgeous dahlias, such cosmos (four and five inches in diameter), such exquisite roses and the host of other lovely blooms in a dry season, what miracles could it produce under normal weather conditions?

The ballroom of the attractive old hotel was a perfect riot of color from the 400 entries, some of which were carried to the veranda during the luncheon of 82 covers with which the clubwomen opened their season Saturday.

The judges, Mrs. C. Ward Eicher, Mrs. Curtis H. Gregg and Mrs. Anna T. McIntyre, of the Westmoreland Garden Club, awarded first prizes to Mrs. Louise R. Schmertz, Mrs. C. D. Ambrose, Mrs. James Mull, Mrs. James Irwin, Mrs. Wayne Rawley, Mrs. Walter Stewart, Mrs. A. G. Clark, Mrs. William Watson Smith, Miss Mae McDowell, Mrs. T. O. Seaton, Mrs. Russell Darr, J. Gouchnour, Mrs. Ida Queer, Mrs. J. W. Updegraff, Owen Potts and Mrs. Harry Smith.

At the luncheon, Mrs. Clarence A. Hamill, retiring president, spoke of the place the club has made for itself in the community, made, not on any assumption of authority, but on its co-operation with all worthwhile activities of the town. She gave to her successor, Mrs. George S. Naugle, a gavel made from walnut grown on the old Gen. Arthur St. Clair place and a gift from a descendant of the Ramsey family, for whom Ligonier had first been named Ramseytown.

The program included vocal solos by Mrs. Paul Peterson, accompaniments and piano solos by Mrs. Charles Murdock, and a piano and violin duet by two high school students, Miss Ruth Renwick and John Morozzi. Mr. Treager, who later conducted a meeting of the Junior Garden Club, spoke concerning the effective work these youngsters are doing, sponsored by the Woman's Club in co-operation with State College.

Felicitations were voiced by Mrs. David Denman, president of the Westmoreland County Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. O. G. Leichliter, retiring president of the Wilkinsburg Woman's Club; Mrs. Charles Walker, president of the Bolivar Current Events Club, and Miss Minnie Ogden, president of the Latrobe Civic Club.

LIGHT WEIGHT WOOLENS ARE CHAMPIONS OF DAYTIME MODE

Paris Bureau, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, Sept. 15.—Of all the materials employed for daytime wear during the brisk days of autumn, fine woolens emerge as the lightweight champions. Frocks of these materials are immensely popular here just now and that means that they are to be observed wherever les elegantes convene. Such frocks are trig and lend themselves to intricate tucking, pleating, cording and other details without acquiring too much of a tailored look or appearing too fussy. And that's a pretty difficult feat for any dress to perform. The lightweight woolens are even finer and more supple than last year's offerings from the mills which each year seem to weave more dexterously and successfully. And so, the frock of woolen fabric emerges from the utility class and takes its place in the ranks of the dressed for all but strictly formal daytime usage, allowing us to forego our coats and still fare forth on a brisk autumn day, in good-looking comfort.

MANY OF THIS season's hats are rendered more piquant by the addition of a little Russian dressing. A few very smart modistes are showing little Cossack toques that lend themselves delightfully to the current modes. Many of the new fur caps are on the Cossack order, as well as hats of various fabrics. Just to show you how very fetching such a cap can be, we have sketched for you a model made by the clever Madame Jose. It is made of a silk fabric that cleverly simulates astrakan and is in black. This particular model is decorated with a heavy tassel of skein wool in red, but other combinations include a smart version in bright red broadcloth with a red and blue tassel. The other model is of brick colored felt with a turned-off-the-face brim caught up against the crown in front by means of an end of matching velvet which is draped across the crown and drawn through a slit in the brim.

THE MOLYNEUX FROCK is made of the much in demand fine, lightweight woolen in black. Heavy vertical cording trims the bodice and skirt down to a point just above the knees where the material flares in a soft flounce. This cording is done on the under side of the fabric but the relief is on the top surface. A soft and becoming bertha is made by a wide and rounding draped collar of self-fabric. Other interesting details include flaring, turn-back cuffs, and a white-stitched black leather belt placed at a high waistline.

Eric's Father Does Not Approve of Raquel

CHAPTER LIII

Early in the week following the Louis XVI fete now graven on the tablets of fashion's history as more elaborate even than the most lavish that distinguished the reign of the perfervid French king, at Versailles, Raquel and Greta were again breakfasting in the garden.

"A message for Mademoiselle," said the man in the velvet coat, placing an envelope on the table beside Raquel.

"It's from Eric," she said, opening it with more eagerness than was her wont.

"Great," said Greta. "Is he bringing you a basket of moss from the castle?"

Raquel went on studying the note.

"It's rather—unlike him," she said.

"Don't tell me he's ducked."

"Don't be silly, Greta. He'll be here tomorrow."

"Well, treat him rough. Tell him about the bathtubs."

Raquel sipped orange juice from a crystal glass.

"He is—worth while," she said.

"Worth how much?"

Raquel's brows drew together in a little V of displeasure.

"Please don't joke about Eric," she said shortly. "He's really a fine type. I care more for him than anyone I've met in a long time. I'm rather fed up with the crowd at Alphonse's. There are too many of them. And not always the right kind."

Greta Puzzled

"Whew!" whistled Greta. "What's wrong with the merry mob?"

"They're too raucous."

"Too what? Rawcuss? I'll admit some of 'em are pretty raw and no few are cussed, but as a rule they're not so bad, not so bad."

Raquel continued: "At the fete, there was a famous gambler. He is a gambler, even if he does own most of the Riviera. And an infamous prince. A pink pig. A specter."

"Yes, and a couple of East Indian potentates with rubies in their turbans as big as the face on the town clock," said Greta. "Gosh! how my fingers itched! Not to mention a flock of heavy politicos and society dames, the big noise at the Opera Comique, that prima donna you rave about, and at least one bimbo who takes his nourishment from a throne when his ma can keep him planted on it. Must I go on?"

"No. Those are people. But not the right people."

"What makes you think so?"

"Going about with Eric Stafford has taught me."

Greta choked over a piece of melon. "My heavings, dearie," she managed. "Lady Stafford broadcasting. It's beginning to work already."

Raquel ignored the charge. "You may think it's funny," she said, "but just the same, it's true. One may have everything—money — beauty — pleasure—adventure. These are essential, surely. But there is something more. Position. Eric has that."

"Well, maybe so," said Greta, helping herself to another piece of melon. "But buhlieve me, I prefer a gent from Pittsburgh with a couple of million in his kick. Does Alphonse know how you feel about Stafford?"

"I don't know," said Raquel. "He seems to like Eric. And he's constantly finding ways to throw us together."

Eric Returns

That afternoon Alphonse confided to Raquel that her commissions from the Bosart order, which had been secured as she planned, were the largest in the history of the firm.

Raquel did not ask the amount. She drew such money as she needed from the cashier in Chez Alphonse. The sums were negligible. The house in Neuilly and its expenses were taken care of by Alphonse. So were the clothes she wore. These things were a part of the cost of operation, he explained, and showed a very handsome profit on the investment. What the Queen of Beauty wore was law to her followers in the fashionable world.

We shall go to Deauville shortly," Alphonse told Raquel. "I have arranged for a special motor for you and Miss Greta. It is done in grays. Thought should be given to motor togs, considering all France spends its holidays on wheels. I have designed a complete line. It is, I believe, most unusual."

Raquel made no comment. If she should accept Eric Stafford she would not go to Deauville. Another woman would ride in the special motor done in grays. A new beauty would set off the creations of Chez Alphonse.

Eric came to her in the garden of the house in Neuilly. In the twilight of the following day.

"It's knocked me out completely, being away from you," he confessed, his lips straight.

"Why—yes," she said, moved by his emotion. She was glad he should have given way so dramatically to his feelings. He dropped into a chair.

There was that in his posture which told Raquel he was troubled.

"There is something I must tell you, Raquel," he said at last. "I don't know precisely how to go about it."

Unpleasant News

Something he must tell her? Something disappointing, of course. This much was evident. Eric was not easily shaken. He faced life squarely. Then the something must be more than disappointing. It must be downright disastrous.

"I'm not to be Lady Stafford, after all," thought Raquel. The lily lifted a haughty sable crown.

"If what you must say is disagreeable," she said coolly, "I'd advise your plunging into it and having it done with."

Stafford braced himself for the task.

"I saw the pater," he said. "He was very stiff. He'd heard about—us."

"Yes?" A show of indifference.

"Yes. Someone took him the news. I had hoped to get to him first. He—he—disapproves."

The lily tossing slightly on its stem.

"You see, he had other plans for me," Stafford hurried on. "There's a young woman in England—our families have been very close for generations—our parents rather imagined we'd make a go of it. Fine girl, Cynthia. One of the best. Great pal. Great sport. I thought myself we might try it together—until I met you. Can't go it. Don't love her. You must know, dear, how it is with me?"

Raquel watched a bee emerge from the heart of a rose. So laden with honey it found difficulty in carrying the load.

Fay King Sees a Selfish Trend Replacing Old-Fashioned Matchmaking

WHERE ARE THE MATCH-MAKERS WHO USED TO DELIGHT SO IN MARRYING OFF THEIR YOUNG FRIENDS?
MRS REYNL IS GOING TO GET A DIVORCE AND MARRY YOUNG CASH — HE'S GOT MILLIONS, THEY SAY!
HAVE YOU HEARD THAT OLD GOOFUS IS GOING TO MARRY AGAIN — AND TO THAT LITTLE SEVENTEEN YEAR OLD SMITH GIRL?
I'M ENGAGED!
BUT YOU'RE NOT DIVORCED!
FAY KING

By FAY KING

When woman's place was decidedly in the home, she wanted to see every other woman have a happy home, too.

If she met an eligible young man, her first thought was that he should marry. Her second thought was of just the girl for him. She delighted in happy matchmaking.

Today with so much freedom, self-expression and independence—which are often just selfishness—when she meets a handsome rich young man, she sees in him an excellent prospective husband for—herself.

Some become engaged before they are divorced.

This is as regrettable as seeing a young girl become the third wife of a man too old for her.

The rightful choice of a single young man is a single young girl.

New Boarder Proves to Be the "Trailing Detective"

There was so much persuasive intensity in Mrs. Cosgrove's voice, an intensity which I knew must be reflected from her sick brother's talks with her, that I hastened to agree with her. After all, I reflected, there was soundness in the old adage concerning a sheep and a lamb, and if my conscience compelled me to keep my promise to Robert Savarin that I would secretly administer his bequest to Lillian, which he ostensibly had willed to me, I might as well use his smaller personal bequest to me for the many appeals to which I listened each year, so often, hopelessly, from sheer lack of funds.

"What you have said certainly put a different aspect upon things," I told Mrs. Cosgrove. "If Robert does not release me from my promise about the money he has left to Lillian, I might as well do what he wishes about the other bequest. But you can—"

My voice trailed away into a shamed silence, as I realized what I was asking of Robert Savarin's sister. But neither her face nor her voice betrayed any disquiet.

"If there is anything I can do, rest assured I shall do it," she said, competently. "But you mustn't count on it. The only thing I can think of—but that is so far fetched I mustn't mention it. However—if Robert—lingers—and I should send for you, could you drop everything and come up here at once? You would only need to stay an hour or two if I knew beforehand just what time you would be here."

"I will hold myself in readiness to come to you at any minute," I said.

"Don't count on anything," she admonished me. "But I will do the best I can. Let me get one point clear. It is not so much the taking care of Robert's bequest to Lillian which troubles you, but the publicity which must follow the reading of the will. If it could be arranged so that only you and I would know of it you would be willing to act."

"Not willing," I returned, honestly, "but the task would not be the well-nigh impossible thing it is now."

"Of course, you realize the main reason why Robert wished to leave this in trust to you," she said. "He feared that even if Mr. Underwood were to go out of Lillian's life again, her inordinate pride would prevent her from making use of any legacy from Robert. But he knows that she would go to you in any trouble, as she would to a sister, or as you would go to her."

"But doesn't he know?" I asked, vehemently, "that Lillian's keen perceptions never could be deceived by such a camouflaged bequest. She will know why the money was left to me, and Mr. Underwood and my husband will guess. All his scheming will have gone for nothing."

"I have thought of that often," Mrs. Cosgrove said, thoughtfully, "but I have dared say nothing to cross Robert, and he has been so wrapped up in his great wish to provide for Lillian that he has overlooked everything else. The details of the thing have never occurred to him. The nurse tells me he is stronger tonight than he has been for a long time. If that strength continues, but there—I must promise you nothing, for I do not know what I can do. How long are you going to be here?"

"We plan to start back early in the morning," I told her. "As you can imagine, we have much to do at this season, and even though your brother should—"

"There is no possible use in Lillian's staying," she said. "She has given Robert great happiness, and he is content and so happy. Another visit would only harrow his feelings instead of soothing him."

"Thank you so much for telling me that," I said. "It agrees with my own thought, but I needed your assurance that I was right. And now I must go back to Lillian. But please call on me for anything, at any time."

"I will," she said, pressing my hand tightly, and then I was back in the road walking swiftly toward the Hasbrouck house.

Mrs. Hasbrouck came out into the hall at my entrance.

"I thought I'd better tell you," she said. "We have another lodger tonight, a traveling salesman whose car broke down a few rods from here. He's got it down in the garage near the postoffice, and they've promised to have it fixed by morning. He's in the rear room on your floor, but he seems a nice, quiet man. I don't think he'll disturb you."

"A breakdown is so annoying," I said, trying to make my voice casual. "What kind of a car was he driving?"

"A black roadster," Mrs. Hasbrouck replied, naming the make of the car driven by the private detective who had trailed us in the city.

Tomorrow's Horoscope

Tuesday, September 16

A generally adverse and difficult state of affairs is predicted from the governing lunar influences of this day. There may be a very difficult and stubborn situation to surmount with treachery, misrepresentation and fraud inspiring enmity and possible litigation. However, the mind will be keen and alert, and with the new plans and projects under favorable astral tokens, with discretion and sagacity affairs may be made to prosper in the end. Be careful with writings.

Those whose birthday it is are confronted by a year calling for sagacity, wisdom and discretion in directing affairs over tenacious obstacles and difficult circumstances. There is a portent of treachery, fraud, misrepresentation and subtle enmity, with danger from papers or writings.

A child born on this day should have a keen and penetrating mental equipment which it may need to overcome tenacious obstacles as well as subtle enmities in life.

The Marry-Go-Round

By HELEN ROWLAND

We Moderns

One way for a woman to get a man's salary is to look under the cushions of the divan after he has been napping on it.

The modern mother is inclined to spend too much time trying to teach her daughter how to get a husband, and not enough trying to teach her how to be a wife. Matrimony is a life-job—but it's not much use to get a job unless you are qualified to hold it.

Nothing gives a man such an eerie feeling as for his wife to stop arguing with him, all of a sudden, and begin looking inscrutable.

A man will cheerfully trot along in the harness of love for years without knowing it; but the moment he feels the tug of a woman's hand on the reins he is seized with a sudden desire to bolt.

Half the people in the world would sell their souls to get into the public eye—and the other half would give their fortunes (if necessary) just to keep out of the limelight, the newspapers and the telephone book.

When a divorcee marries a second time, she is taking a post-graduate course in the School of Experience, and often finds that she has signed up for a few more hard lessons.

The old-fashioned lover said, "Darling, do you think you could love me?" The modern lover says, "Darling, don't you think you could make me love you?"

So confident is a man of his own mental superiority that he will cheerfully marry a moron or a dumbbell—and then expect his son to be a brilliant genius.

We moderns are fiends for exercise! We exercise our muscles, our rights, our prerogatives and, sometimes, our brains—but very seldom our conscience.

CORRECT MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Signing the Hotel Register

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When registering with my father and brother at a hotel, should it read:

Mr. George Bunting and son, Walter, and daughter, Anne?

2. Should my father register?

—R. V. S.

1. It is better form to make separate registrations: Mr. George Bunting, Pittsburgh. Miss Anne Bunting, Pittsburgh. Mr. Walter Bunting, Pittsburgh.

2. Yes. Or each may sign the register.

A Bad Social Error

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me if it is proper to keep your spoon in your cup of tea or coffee while eating, or should it be put on your saucer?

WAITING.

This is a terrible breach of table manners—please raise your right hand and promise that you will never do it. When you are finished stirring your coffee, place your spoon on the saucer—don't leave it standing in the cup.

The Hostess Extends the Invitation

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Mother intends to have a shower for my sister who is to be married this summer. Please advise me as to whether it is correct for mother to sign her name to the invitations or shall I, the bride-to-be's sister (unmarried and living at home) sign my name to the invitations?

D. S.

Since your mother is planning the party, she is to be the hostess, and therefore she should sign the notes of invitation.

The Doctor's Title

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When introducing a brother, who is a doctor, should he be introduced as "my brother" or as "my brother, Doctor Blank"?

A. P.

Since your brother has a title which would not, probably, be known to the person to whom you are making the introduction, it would be better to mention his name and title, as in the last part of your question.

Household Hints

A roll of white passe-partout is a very convenient substitute when one has forgotten to buy fruit labels. Just cut it the required length, write the name on it and it is ready for use. A roll will last several seasons.

Don't try to economize by buying poor grades of tea and coffee. These articles appear at every meal and should be most enjoyable. Besides, poor grades of tea and coffee usually mean lack of strength and more of the article is needed than a better brand and so the economy is lost.

TELL IT TO SALLY

By SALLY MARTIN

Shall You Allow the Children to Entertain Their Friends at Home?

Have kids rights?

Is the home as much theirs as mother's or dad's?

Should they be allowed to bring their friends there, turn on the radio, roll back the rugs, make chocolate 'n' cinnamon toast on the kitchen range—even if they do keep the old folks awake with the racket, and maybe spot things up a bit?

Or are homes for parents—is the kid just an unpleasant accident that has to be kept in its place without pleasure or privilege?

Evidently Ethel's Ma and Dad are strong for the latter viewpoint, for Ethel seems just about as welcome as a kitchen cockroach. Not allowed to go out—nor to bring anyone in—What's going to happen when young seventeen meets up with treatment like that? Plenty—or we're no prophet!

Because Ethel, besides wistful amber eyes and a cloud of ruffly brown curls, has plenty of spunk and fire—and she's as wild for life as a young timber wolf. If she can't have life in the pleasant safety of her own fireside—she'll find it somehow, somewhere — with somebody else! And it won't be Ma 'n' Dad who will do the picking!

Doubtless Dad and Ma would tell you that they're denying her friends to "protect her and keep her safe." But are they?

Is any girl safe, who can't bring her friends to her own home? Tune in on this. It's a broadcast we hear all too often these days.

"Dear Sally—

"Will you act as judge in my case, please? I need help badly. I am so unhappy.

"I am 17 years old, and I have been working in an office for over a year. I have lots of girl and boy friends, but I am never allowed to go out with them, or have them at my home.

"If I ask to go out in the evening, there are no questions asked at all about where I want to go, or who I want to go with. Right off the bat, without any preliminaries, I get the usual answer—"no!" The very few and far-between times I have been allowed to go out, I have been given definite instructions to be in at 10 o'clock. Once, I was allowed to stay till 11. But only once. And if I am ever a minute late, there is such a fearful rumpus that I would almost rather not go at all. And there is the same rumpus every time I ask to go anywhere.

"Now, mind you, I am not asking for any wild times or late hours. Nor do I want to go out every night in the week. The only thing I ask is to be allowed to go with my friends without being screamed at like I was a criminal. And to invite my friends to my home now and then. Which is something I dare not do. My parents have told me flatly that if I ever bring anyone home they will tell them to their faces that they are not wanted. They seem to think that our home is for them, and no one else.

"They have never made one move to get acquainted with any of the young people I know, but still they are perfectly willing to pass judgment on them and say they won't have them around. Is that fair? My friends are not wild. I don't care for wild kids. But I do want to live. Haven't I a right to do that?

"My parents never go anywhere themselves. They're content to just stagnate. And they expect me to be just like them.

"I have been working and hearing other young folks around me talking about friends and making plans to be with them, until I just feel like sitting and crying my eyes out. I am so lonely! They like me and ask me out, but when I can't go, what's life worth, anyway? Let me tell you it's terrible to be like this. My life is just the same thing, day in and day out, and it's driving me mad. It's so dead and so monotonous that I could scream.

"And I don't intend to stand it much longer. I can't stand it. I don't know what I'm going to do, but I'm going to do something. I want to live and I intend to live. I've tried to reason with my father and mother, but they won't listen. I am more than willing to obey them and respect them, if they'll give me half a chance. But I feel that they're all wrong in this, and I feel like doing something desperate.

"Please help me. What do you think? Who's right?

"ETHEL."

There's the story. Not a happy one, is it? Nor a safe one for lonely, rebellious young Seventeen? Anything but! Danger's rocking and flaring there, louder and brighter than a railroad signal. Easy enough to see that—when you read it on the printed page. But I wonder if it's as easy to see, when that story is being lived in the house next door—or perhaps in your own home.

Does that startle you? Yet it may be true. Perhaps through your stupid love, your stubborn ignorance, your selfish coddling of your own comfort, you may be inflicting just such misery on the youngsters in your own family. If you are, snap out of it, or some day you'll wake to find trouble camping on your doorstep. And if you do, it won't be the kids' fault . . . it will be yours!

Yes, I know you want them to grow into healthy, useful citizens, but you can't make 'em either healthy or useful by locking 'em up like criminals and snarling at 'em for being human and young. You can only do it by giving them love and sympathy and understanding . . . by helping them to learn to live. You can only do it by realizing that good times and plenty of friends are as necessary to youth as good food and sleep. And because they are necessary, the kids will get them, somehow, if they have the spunk God gave an angle worm. If they can't get them honestly, safely, they'll get them stealthily and dangerously.

So give the kids a square deal! You brought them into the home. It's up to you to let them use it! Yes, I know they make a lot of noise and a lot of clutter. But what of it? Noise and clutter are a lot better than what might happen some day if you drive them into revolt!

How to Keep Well

By DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

Don't Worry About Occasional Nose Bleed

What a number of things there are to worry about! A lot of worrying is done over nosebleed.

One of the most common of childhood ailments is bleeding from the nose. Usually it is not at all serious. Nose bleed is almost always founded on some local disturbance, easily accounted for and corrected.

DR. COPELAND

It is always well to see a doctor if nose bleed occurs often, or if the bleeding is long continued. A very great loss of blood is not good for anyone.

In our northern climate, especially on the Atlantic sea coast, and inland on the Great Lakes, where there is much moisture in the atmosphere, catarrh is one of the most common ailments. One who has repeated colds and catarrh is very apt to have nose bleed from broken tissues in the nose.

In some acute fevers nose bleed is a symptom. Measles, influenza, pneumonia, diphtheria, whooping cough, scarlet fever, and especially typhoid fever, are such diseases. Condition where the quality of the blood is reduced, as in anemia, may be accompanied by nose bleed.

Of course, if you have a blow on the nose or some other injury there you would expect to have bleeding after it. But don't worry, nature has provided a clotting of the blood to stop the flow of blood. The ordinary natural processes will usually stop the nose bleed.

There are several simple remedies that can be used in case of nose bleed. Cold applications on the back of the neck or over the nose are recommended. Sometimes putting the feet in hot water will draw the circulation from the head and thus assist in controlling the bleeding. Pinching the nose between the thumb and finger will make pressure sufficient often to control the hemorrhage.

Another good thing to use is tannic acid dissolved in water. This can be applied on cotton. Clear the nose by blowing out the blood clots and then push into the nasal passage a cotton tampon saturated with the fluid.

The sight of blood is apt to frighten people. We are taught that the blood stream is the very life of the body, and of course it is. But fear is foolish for it sets the heart to beating strongly, and this, in turn, increases the bleeding. Say soothing things to the patient. Calm his fears.

THE BEAUTY BOX

By HELEN FOLLETT

If a woman wants to enjoy a sense of luxury let her procure cosmetics that carry the same perfume—soaps, creams, lotions, powders, toilet waters, bath salts, sachet and talcum. She will feel like a million dollars in cash money. The whole outfit works together harmoniously and there are no sweet odors wasted, as is the case when various scents are used and they get into fights and try to kill each other. Furs hold perfume longer than fabrics do. Sachets in handkerchief and hat boxes promote the good work.

When young women get sun ray lines around their eyes, they are usually underweight. The skin surface, lacking the support of adipose cushions, takes on a crepe-like appearance. Oiling with cold cream should be done before saying one's prayers at night, and if the little dear can be made to take her cod liver oil like a good child, there will soon be a difference in her appearance. Blondes, having more delicate skins than brunettes, are usually the ones who suffer most from premature wrinkles. Especially the featherweights.

Beauty questioners are forever asking for the name of some drug that can be put in the eyes to produce a glisten, or to enlarge the pupil. There is an answer to that; the only safe eye brightener is good health, and the next best one is the sparkling, animated mind.

White hair should be beautifully dressed. No casual topwad will do for silvery tresses. If the soap shampoo discolors white locks, as it sometimes does, the white of eggs should be used instead. In beauty shops can be found a purplish-blue liquid which is used in the last rinsing water to bleach away the yallary tints.

MY 50 YEARS IN BASEBALL

by CONNIE MACK
MANAGER OF WORLD CHAMPION PHILADELPHIA ATHLETICS

INSTALLMENT NO. 7.

Nearly everybody has a day that sands out brilliantly in memory. Mine came one September afternoon in 1886.

In the spring of that year I went to Hartford eager for another season of baseball and the hope that it would mean further advancement to me. During the previous winter Hartford had left the Connecticut State League and joined the Eastern League, the foundation of the present International League.

It was a much faster organization than the State League, but my work with Hartford against sterner opposition must have pleased the owners because they raised my salary from $165 to $200 during the race.

We were nearing the end of a successful and prosperous season when Walter Hewitt, owner of the Washington team of the National League, jumped off a train and went to the ball park. Before many hours he had bought five Hartford players.

They were William Kreig, catcher and first baseman; George Schoch, third baseman and jack of all baseball trades; Gilmore, my favorite pitcher; Henry, another pitcher, and myself. The Washington club paid $3,500 for the lot. Quite a difference from the modern price tags.

In those days, this was considered a big deal and a great outlay of money. We were ordered to join Washington at once and play with the club for the rest of the season, which had six more weeks to go.

I received $800 to finish the season and at the same time signed a contract for $2,750 for 1887. That was more money than I ever thought I could make in baseball and I now felt satisfied that I made no mistake leaving a $15 job in a shoe factory to devote my future to baseball. Real success, measured by dollars, came to me at last.

That made me the first native of the Brookfields to ever attain the major league grade and I was as happy as if I had been elected president of the United States. Years later, Marty and Bill Bergen, both players of the highest efficiency, followed my steps. It is a coincidence that the three men the Brookfields sent to the majors all were catchers. Baseball never has seen better throwing or more artful receiving catchers than the Bergen brothers. Poor Marty had a tragic finish while in his prime, but Bill lasted for many years and is alive today.

The five delighted Hartford players, suddenly elevated to major league status, lost no time reporting to Washington. We were rent into action without delay, for Washington fans had been squawking long and hard for new players.

Wins in Big League Debut

The next day, John Gaffney, the Washington manager, former king of umpires, who left the staff to pilot the Senators, picked Gilmore and myself for the battery, while he also pressed Kreig and Schoch into service.

The visiting team happened to be the Phillies, and Harry Wright, who always was a great figure in baseball and one of its most helpful pioneers, sent Ed Daley and Cusack as the battery against us. We won that game in the ninth inning, 4 to 3, when Paul Hines hit a triple with a man on base.

You can imagine the expressions of joy issuing from the tips of the Hartford alumni in the dressing room after the game. Suddenly they stopped as Manager Gaffney burst into the clubhouse with a look . . . well, it was absolutely non-smiling.

"Here, you new fellers," he shouted, "don't get swell-headed because you happened to win."

Then he disappeared as quickly as he came. That remark of his always stayed with me. He didn't know any of our personal habits and I always imagined he believed that we might all go out and paint the town red over this initial success.

Gilmore at this time was a real help to me. He was a pitcher of the highest order, but there his value ended. He could not field his position and I think he was the most impossible hitter that ever lived even among pitchers. He actually was applauded when he hit a foul. He had tremendous speed and where he got it from was a mystery because of his lanky build.

In the spring of 1887, we trained in Washington. The best point of our work that season was the terrific pitching of Grasshopper Jim Whitney. Washington that year won 41 or 42 games, I forget which, and Whitney won 29 of them. That must be a record.

In those days, catchers didn't have the pitch-out sign, but Whitney watched bases closely and always threw out to me, so I was able to retire numerous base-runners during the year. We worked so well together that Whitney would not pitch unless I was slated to catch him.

Manager Gaffney was a Worcester (Mass.) boy and there was a postponed game between Washington and Boston that it was impossible to play in either city, so it was played off as a championship game in Worcester before a tremendous crowd.

In this game, it was my fortune to make a play that was so unusual that Boston papers devoted a column or more to it the next morning.

At one stage of this game, King Kelly, of "Slide, Kelly, Slide" fame, who in skill and audacity as a baserunner never had a superior, was on second base. John Morrell, the Boston manager, who was very slow, perched on first base.

Connie Makes Famous Play

This was the copyrighted situation for the double steal, as baserunning was a big part of the attack in those days. Kelly pranced back and forth and got his usual jump on the pitcher and was almost within sliding distance of third base when the ball nested in my glove. In a flash, it occurred to me that I never could get Kelly. So, instead, I pulled my arm back and hurled an accurate throw to the second baseman, who tagged the amazed Morrell standing up. Veteran Boston writers said it never was made before. During the remainder of the season I made the play frequently and many catchers since have adopted it.

Just before the season closed, leading fans at Washington presented me a silver tea set that I still possess and cherish. It is all the more prized because the presentation speech was made by Nicholas E. Young, president of the National League from 1885 to 1902.

That fall, on my return to New England, I was married to Margaret Hogan, of Spencer, Mass., a short distance from East Brookfield. Three children, Roy, Earl and Margaret, sprang from that union. Five years later, Mrs. Mack died. Both of these sons today are in baseball. Roy is secretary of the Portland Club, of the Pacific Coast League, while Earl is one of my coaches on the Athletics' ball club.

DONNELLI'S FUTURE AS COACH BRIGHT

DUQUESNE UNIVERSITY, which will open the Pittsburgh gridiron season with a game against West Virginia University at Forbes Field next Friday night, enters upon a new era this fall with the introduction of freshman football at the school. The institution's first formal freshman squad and first freshman coach have been appearing daily on the Bluff campus since the varsity started training operations. Buff Donnelli, beginning a coaching career with the brightest of prospects, has charge of the huge squad of yearling gridders, among whom he hopes to find and develop material of the kind required to play the Layden brand of Notre Dame football.

Buff Donnelli.

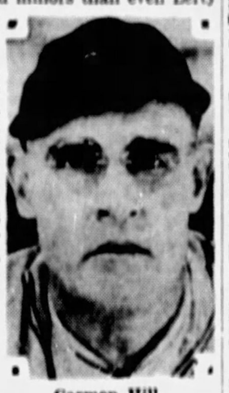
Elmer Layden has done a lot of things here with his knowledge of the Rockne system, and has evolved his own style of play with the lore he acquired from the famous Knute as the foundation. It will be the task of Donnelli, the greatest player in the history of Duquesne during his four years, to teach his proteges the Layden system so that they will be able to carry on during their varsity seasons to follow.

BUFF WAS CAPTAIN of the Dukes during his last two years and a good one. He will be a good coach, too, if the inspirational and leadership qualities he showed on the field count for anything. There is a strong recommendation for him in the great playing record he made following his entry into Duquesne the year before the Dukes acquired their famous member of the Four Horsemen as coach. Donnelli had been playing center under Coach Frank P. McDermott, but he was not a good center and Layden soon found that out.

Layden also discovered, however, that Buff had an extensive knowledge of soccer and a remarkable degree of agility, accuracy and power in his stocky legs. The boy could kick long punts, hard and accurate placements and drops, and kick them faster, much faster, than you would expect. Moreover, he could kick them with either foot. Here was a find out of whom much could be made, Layden decided. The rest is history. The Donnelli kicking is now a legend on the Bluff, and it's going to mean a great deal to Duquesne in the years to come if Buff can teach the boys under him how to do things on the gridiron even nearly as well as he did them himself.

CARMEN HILL, former Pirate pitcher, probably is baseball's leading commuter. In his ups and downs and his ins and outs he has done more traveling between the majors and minors than even Lefty O'Doul or Dewitt Lebourveau. He was with the Pittsburgh club alone no fewer than four times.

The Pirates brought him up first in 1915 and later sent him to Youngstown. He was back the following year, only to get a ticket to Rochester. From there he drifted to Birmingham and Kansas City, returning to this city in 1918. He was shipped to Indianapolis in 1919, but 1922 found him back in the big show with the Giants. He returned to Indianapolis in 1923, but 1926 found him again with the Bucs. Last year he was transferred to the Cardinals on a waiver claim. The Cards sent him to Minneapolis this season, but now they've brought him back again. His schedule for next season is still in the making.



Carmen Hill.

OUT CLEVELAND WAY some football training is scheduled to start today that will be followed with much interest by Pittsburghers. That's where Karl Davis is making good progress on the job of putting Western Reserve University on the big-time map to follow up the years of brilliant success which he placed to his credit while graduate manager at Pitt.

Gordon Locke, starting his fifth year as head coach at Reserve, puts his Red Cats at work today for the first time in preparation for the toughest schedule the school ever faced. Both Pitt and Carnegie Tech are to be met in Cleveland, among others, the Panthers being booked to play there on October 11 and the Tartans on October 25.

RESERVE HAS ALREADY made such advances under the able directorship of Manager Davis that, whereas the Cleveland outfit just a few years back was meeting only the smaller teams of Ohio, the schedule this year includes not only Pitt and Carnegie but Ohio University, Ohio Wesleyan, Oberlin, St. Xavier, Case and Muskingum.

The outlook is good for a vastly improved team. Locke has lost only three letter men in Capt. John Marshall, guard, and Austin Platz and Ed Smith, halfbacks. Seven of last season's regulars who were only sophomores then are a year richer in experience, the material from the 1929 freshman team is exceptionally good, and the Red Cats will have a squad of about 40 men, with at least 30 of them looking like real prospects.

IT IS ABOUT TIME for tri-state tennis followers to awaken to the pleasant realization that in their midst has sprung up one of the most promising feminine racqueters of America's rising crop. Margaret Carspecken, Morgantown girl, is the star in question, and the fact that last Friday she defeated Cecelia Riegel for the Philadelphia grass court title is ample evidence that the indomitable West Virginian has "arrived."

Miss Riegel is an experienced and respected hand at high-class

ROBINS TAKE N. L. LEAD

BUCS, GIANTS IN FAREWELL TILT TODAY

By CHARLES J. DOYLE.
Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—The Pirates this morning were close enough to a first division berth to sense a satisfying flavor. On top of two spectacular victories over the Giants yesterday, the Buccos were a happy family, yet the family physician had a big job on his hands.

Charley Wood, of Wichita and Spartansburg, was one of the principal casualties of yesterday's sugar-coated triumph. The 20-year-old southpaw star was struck on the pitching elbow by one of Bill Walker's fast shoots. The youngster tried to continue, but eventually he had to leave the scene in favor of Larry French. Whether it will prevent his taking his regular turn on the slab was undetermined today.

ENS HANDICAPPED

To add to the troubles of Skipper Ens, Ervine Brame, a most dependable pitcher, came up yesterday with a bad back. Brame has an injury that acts like a rib out of place. He is so sore in the tender portion that he cannot take any strenuous exercise.

So Steve Swetonic is the only

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOON OF SATURDAY: THE MOST COSTLY SIGNATURE—JOSE MARIA ROMO—Jose Maria Romo, deputy and landowner of the state of Sonora, Mexico, was one of the signers of the famous "Plan de Hermosillo," a document which initiated the Mexican Revolution in 1929, headed by Gen. Escobar, Topete and others. In March, 1930, Judge Silvio, of the Superior Court of Sonora, rendered a decision that Romo's signature on the plan makes him liable for the full amount of cost and damages which the Escobar Revolution entailed to the Mexican government and people. The total has been assessed at 100,000,000 pesos, for which the Mexican government has execution against Romo's holdings in Sonora. Thus his signature has proved to be the most expensive ever affixed in history.

CARDINALS DROP TO SECOND IN TIGHT RACE

Associated Press.

Brooklyn, St. Louis and Chicago, lined up in a new order today, are practically on even terms in the Nationa' League pennant race. Each has lost 60 games. The difference in the number of victories puts Brooklyn a half game ahead of St. Louis and a full game ahead of Chicago.

The New York Giants were practically eliminated from the race as they lost a double header to Pittsburgh yesterday and found themselves 5½ games back of first place. The Giants lost the first clash in the tenth inning 8 to 6, then went down before the pitching of Charley Wood in the seven-inning second game, 7 to 3. Their percentages:

Club—	W.	L.	Pct.	Games Behind to Play
Brooklyn	83	60	.580	—
St. Louis	82	60	.577	½
Chicago	81	60	.575	1
New York	77	65	.542	5½

THE "IF" OF IT

IF the Robins, Cards and Giants win or lose, and the Cubs win two, lose two or break even today, this is how they'll stand tonight:

	Win	Lose
Brooklyn	.583	.576
St. Louis	.580	.573
*Chicago	.580	.573
New York	.545	.530

*Win two, lost two; split even .573.

Brooklyn's amazing Robins won their way to the top yesterday by scoring their tenth straight victory at the expense of the Cincinnati Reds. The score was 8 to 3. Thurston gave the Reds three runs in the first inning, but Jim Elliott shut them out with six hits in eight and two-thirds frames while powerful hitting against Rixey and Kolp soon put the Robins ahead.

The Cardinals, who took the lead Saturday as Chicago's Cubs dropped to third through a defeat by the Phillies, promptly went back to second place yesterday as they divided a doubleheader with the Boston Braves. Effective pitching by Burleigh Grimes and equally effective hitting gave the Cards the first game, 9 to 2, but the Braves slammed Sylvester Johnson around to take the second 7 to 4.

The Cubs and Philadelphia were idle yesterday, but have a doubleheader today.

A'S KEEP BERTH

The Philadelphia Athletics made their hold on first place in the American League a little safer by bumping Wesley Ferrell and the Cleveland Indians for a 7-to-1 triumph, while Washington was losing a close decision to Chicago, Earnshaw, starting his second

Grays Win Pair From Blacksox

STRONG LINE, RESERVES WESLEYAN ASSETS

BACKFIELD BIG PROBLEM FOR 'CAT COACH

(This is the first of an annual series of articles written by Jess Carver, Pittsburg Sun-Telegraph football writer, dealing with the prospects of tri-state football elevens. The articles, with photos of the Scarlet Hurricane in action, will appear in tomorrow's Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.)

By JESS CARVER

BUCKHANNON, W. Va., Sept. 14.—Though failing to miss last year's great backfield combination of Mike Rodriguez, Battles and Bachtel, and missing badly, West Virginia Wesleyan with noticeable improvements on the line and with promising reserves ready to step behind will face the challenge of an exacting gridiron campaign in formidable fashion.

Coach Cebe Ross' great quartet which performed so gallantly a year ago, has been broken up by the rigors of graduation. Miller Bachtel and Rodriguez have passed along, leaving behind only giant Cliff Battles as good a halfback as exists in this tri-state territory. It is around Battles that the new Bobcat backfield will be constructed.

FOUR VETERAN ENDS

Headed by four veteran ends all of whom are letter winners the Bobcat coach has nine lettermen to use for a line foundation. In addition to these nine he has half a dozen others who, while they have yet to win their "W," have been under fire and are not a little experienced. The Cats should boast a strong line behind which the new backs can get their seasoning.

Coach Ross seldom has much to say when it comes to discussing the season's prospects, but he hinted to me, not perhaps in so many words, but by a remark dropped here and there that he is looking forward to a more successful campaign than he and his Bobkittles went through in 1929 when six out of 10 games were lost.

When one comes right down to it, there are very few elevens in the country in Wesleyan's class that would do much better over a 10-game period playing teams of the caliber of West Virginia, New York University, Navy, Davis-Elkins and Georgetown as Wesleyan does.

The big task confronting Coach Ross is the formation of his backfield. As I have mentioned before, Battles is the only sure shot left. But what a shot! Towering 6 feet, 2 inches in height and weighing 190 pounds, capable of consistent 60-yard punting and a good pass receiver, Battles would warm the cockles of any coach, even a Sutherland or a Dobie.

BEVERIDGE AT FULL

In the Ross system of play the backs are more or less interchangeable. At fullback husky Paul Beveridge, who tips the beam at around 185 and who was a letterman last year, figures to cut somewhat of a figure. He is a good line buster who can be depended upon to draw in most secondary defenses.

Biandru, another six footer, Post and McCluskey, holdovers, Black, Coleman, Flask, Hall, Hull, Raines, Warden, Lyon and the two young Bachtels, Art and Howard, complete the list of candidates. Art Bachtel is a speed merchant and a driver to boot. He is being favored to some extent as a running mate for Battles.

A tentative backfield combination would include Battles, Art Bachtel, Beveridge and possibly Biandru.

Watson and Red Hagerdon, veteran ends, are in the front line for starting jobs. Sharp and Rhodes, both of whom have had experience enough to win letters will understudy the first pair. Watson is co-captain of the team along with Pete Spatafore, a capable tackle.

Along with Spatafore, Fordyce, a letterman, Lewis and Linger remain from last year's crop of tackles. Newcomers include huskies such as Haynes (182), Meadows (190), Pifer (195), Black (185), and Suter (165).

Crites and Biondin, regular guards on the '29 eleven are being counted upon for heavy duty again this fall. Crites weighs in the neighborhood of 175 and Biondin comes in at 185. Sam Mazzie, a husky 195 pounder, McCourt (185), Myers (186), Mamick (160), Simmons (178), Westfall (210), Brewer (170) and Coyner (165) complete the roster of guard prospects.

Edmundson, 165-pound center last year, is back again and a good bet to retain his position. Experience will swing the selection his way unless some of the newcomers exhibit unexpected class. Moore and Wholf, squad members last year, will have to fight off the challenge of Lowry to hold the first line reserve jobs.

The four ends mentioned earlier will be well bulwarked when it comes to reserves with Eastlack, McTavish, Parker, Proudfoot, Rafeld, Reger, Shuman, Speers, Booth and Conn, this fall's freshmen, eager for varsity chances.

BOOKED WITH DUKES

For the first time since Bob Higgins was head coach here, the Bobcats will show their wares in Pittsburgh. They are booked for a night game with the Dukes at Forbes Field November 21. The season opens Saturday with Broaddus. The following week comes the annual struggle with West Virginia at Morgantown. New York University will be met in Gotham October 4. On October 10, Georgetown will entertain the Bobcats in a night game at Washington, D. C. Glenville State Teachers appear in Buckhannon October 18. The next week, Bethany will be tackled in Wheeling and on the following Saturday comes the annual setto with the Navy at Annapolis. Waynesburg is here for the Homecoming Day classic, November 15. Dukes are met November 22 and the season closes November 29 with Marshall at Huntington, W. Va.

Just a word about the Bobcats and their drawing power. They are a very popular card in New York City. Last year, playing a New York University team that had been thrice defeated and was getting no where fast, 35,000 turned out to see the 'Cats. The Navy makes money with them in Annapolis and Georgetown counts their appearance in Washington each fall as money from home.

Chick Meehan, head coach at New York U., is a great Wesleyan booster. He once made this statement:

"I like to play Wesleyan teams because they are always good teams and always clean teams, but I never know when they are going to beat me."

Cebe Ross, a Wesleyan graduate, is head coach, line coach and backfield coach. Kelcel Ross serves in the capacity of graduate manager, and Bob Herzer handles the publicity. The Bobcats will wear crimson helmets, black jerseys with the orange rosin pads forming a huge fore and large block orange numerals aft.

Members of the North Central Conference of Colleges, which prohibits the sponsoring of football training camps or the holding of formal practice prior to the opening of school, the Bobcats obeyed both the letter and spirit of the law. The first practice session was held last Wednesday, the day school opened, and there were informal workouts staged previous.

Which is a great boost for the way they play the game here.

Morgan Rooters Win From Cecil

Two soccer games were played in the district yesterday afternoon. At Morgan the home team defeated Cecil in an independent game, 2 goals to 0. At Fitz-Henry, the home team and Dunlevy battled to a 2-2 tie.

At Bridgeville yesterday the Keystone League closed the loop with eight clubs. One team will operate at Heidelberg. Bill O'Donnell dropping the idea of another club. Gallatin also passed out of the picture.

The Panhandle League was increased to 10 clubs. The Mollenaux Greens and Glendale entered the loop. The schedules of both leagues will be announced tomorrow.

This evening at Gallatin the final meeting of the Mon-Yough League will be held. Clarksville is the latest entry.

HARVARD DRILLS

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 15.—Harvard opened its 1930 football season at 10 o'clock this morning when the three squads of football players to carry the Crimson of Harvard to more than a decade following Capt. Ben Dibblee of New York, on to Soldiers' Field for their first practice session.

OLYMPICS TOP CHARLEROI, 48 TO 0

By TOM BIRKS.

Flashing a fine offensive and a stonewall defense, the McKeesport Olympics defeated the Charleroi Whippets, 48-0, at Rainbow Gardens yesterday afternoon with 5,000 fans jamming the stands.

It was a critical crowd that saw the Black and White, of McKeesport, which would represent the Tube City in the newly-formed independent conference, and it was agreed that the Olympics are going to be very much in the race for the championship.

GREAT TEAM

Iverson probably has the greatest independent machine that ever represented McKeesport. The Olympics are showing the heaviest backfield seen hereabouts in many days. Charleroi team played hard but was no match for the tricks Scott, former Cornell star, pulled out of the bag. Scott, at quarterback, ran the team to perfection. The new men made a lasting impression, as did some of the members of last year's team.

Dick Toline scored two touchdowns and demonstrated that he cannot be left out. Barnes, the Virginia Military Institute boy, looked splendid as he scored two touchdowns. John English, former Tech end, played long enough to score a touchdown, while Bill Lohr, of last year's Pitt team, also appeared good.

Fred Iverson and Coach Bill Sullivan are going to have a job keeping the right team intact with all that talent.

Fyock, who was with Pitt, and later played professionally with Portsmouth, flashed some brilliant broken field running. He also carried the ball over the Whippets' last line.

CROWD SATISFIED

The large crowd seemed to be satisfied with the work of Iverson in building up a team of that sort. Kaletz got into the game at center in place of Minnick. Zoltag, as usual, looked good.

Despite the heavy score the Whippets put up a great game, only 14 points being scored in the first half. Later, the weight told its tale. Manager Iverson announced that Sykes Reed had been reappointed assistant coach and trainer. Reed has been with the Olympics 15 years. The lineup:

Olympics		Charleroi
English	L. E.	Nada
Fassbere	L. T.	Margonda
Baty	L. G.	Kostura
Minnick	C.	Kaletz
Wallis	R. G.	Gerlat
Contrucio	R. T.	Beppe
McClures	R. E.	Tartaglio
Scott	Q.	Sheppeld
Barnes	L. H.	Korbin
Clark	R. H.	Fleming
Zoltack	F.	Dufgnoli

Touchdowns—Barnes 2, English, Zoltack. Fyock, Toline 2. Points after touchdowns—Zoltack 2, Toline 2, Lohr. Substitutions—Olympics—Woodward, Toline, Kaletz, Quinn, Pottersnake, Dunlay, Hershberg, Beer, Williams, Lohr and Fyock. Charleroi—Stanko, Brogan, King, Miller and Weiss. Referee—Gannon. Umpire—Bee. Head linesman—O'Connell.

Billy Arnold Fails To Qualify in East

WOODBRIDGE, N. J., Sept. 15 (AP.)—Fred Frame, of Los Angeles, won the 25-mile Woodbridge automobile racing sweepstakes from a field of nine yesterday, covering the course in 18 minutes 57 seconds to better the track record set by the late Bob Robinson. Robinson's record had been 19 minutes 28 seconds.

Billy Arnold, champion of the American Automobile Association tracks, failed to qualify in his heat of the feature event. Only four of the field finished the grind.

Grid Interpretation Confab Tonight

Tri-state district football officials, both high school and college, will have an opportunity tonight to get the lowdown on the football rules. Walter E. Okeson, commissioner of the Football Officials' Association, is in town and will hold a meeting at the Keystone A. C.

The meeting, which gets under way at 8 o'clock, will be for the purpose of going over thoroughly the grid rules, with the aim of securing uniform interpretations and decisions.

DUKES POLISH UP MACHINE FOR OPENER

The finishing process will occupy the next few days for Elmer Layden's Duquesne University Dukes, who clash with the West Virginia eleven at Forbes Field on Friday night in the most colorful local opener in years. Added to the fact that the game is more or less of a "natural" the after-dark angle, since the contest will be called under the arc-lights for 8:45 o'clock, also is appealing.

The Night Riders are ready for the Mountaineers insofar as the heavy preparatory work is concerned and Head Coach Elmer Layden plans to eliminate the irregularities in the work of the men as a final touch.

Both the line and backfield are working much more smoothly than during the early part of last week and with several days remaining the Dukes will act with fine coordination.

A mammoth delegation is to arrive from all sections of the state of West Virginia and the crowd at Forbes Field doubtless will reach 25,000.

John D. Holohan, graduate manager of athletics, has been ill for several days, but is expected to be on hand for the first night opener ever played in this city.

INJURIES HURT TECH

The whims of football fate are so capricious that a Carnegie Tech squad which seemed exceptionally material-wealthy two weeks ago was hard-pressed to muster two backfields for the regular Monday scrimmage this afternoon. Slow-healing injuries of Murray Armentrout, Joe Morbito, Slats Flanagan, Hymen Goldberg, John Graveno and George Kavel have taken just half of the Plaid backfield strength out of action two weeks before the opening game with the University of Buffalo.

There is no desire on the part of the Carnegie coaches to circulate gloomy reports from Camp Overend. They merely point to the men forced to the side-lines and go about their business of developing the backfield, a task, incidentally, which has been the hardest of this fall training period.

PITT SPIRIT GREAT

CAMP HAMILTON, Windber, Pa., Sept. 15.—This year's Pitt Panther football squad may be short of nationally prominent stars to the number of five, but it is not short of any squad in Panther history in that very important element that goes in the making of a winning team—spirit.

Every visitor to camp—and there were more than a hundred keen football observers here over the weekend—is impressed with the 1930 brand of football morale.

As practice was resumed today, the start of the third week, this spirit was apparent in the keen fight for positions. Several positions are still open, one halfback post and fullback being wide open, and there being considerable uncertainty about the guards.

W. VA. LEAVES FRIDAY

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Sept. 15.—(AP.)—A change of plans on the part of Coach Rodgers will prevent the West Virginia football team from practicing under the lights before their game Friday night at Pittsburgh with Duquesne University, opening the season.

Coach Rodgers had first planned to leave Thursday, giving the Mountaineers a practice session Thursday night at Forbes Field, where the game will be played. Today he decided not to leave until Friday.

BIG TEN OPENS GRIND

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—(AP.)—Preliminary maneuvers to the battling out of another Western Conference football championship will open today the first day of the period allotted for early training.

This season only nine teams will be actively engaged in the championship struggle—Iowa having been restored to full rights and privileges too late to schedule more than one game against a conference opponent. The race, however, promises to be a free for all, with Purdue demanding the attention due the defending champion.

GRID RULES Interpretations

PLAY NO. 13.

In a game between Harvard and Holy Cross, the 15 minutes of intermission between the first and second halves has expired and the Holy Cross team is on the field ready for the resumption of play. The referee discovers that Harvard had not been properly notified and deems the delay is not excusable when Harvard is two minutes late in arriving.

What is the correct ruling?

ANSWER.

This brings up another change in the 1930 rules. Formerly the offended side had the option of putting the ball into play on the 35-yard line of opponents by scrimmage or having the offending side put the ball into play on its own 15-yard line. In addition, the offended side had the choice of goals.

Under the new rule the choice of goals is no part of the penalty and the referee in this case gives Holy Cross the privilege of putting the ball into play by scrimmage on Harvard's 35-yard line.

Football Contest Blank

Can you recall the Pitt football stars of yesteryear? If you are acquainted with the prowess of the gridiron Panthers, why not select an all-time Pitt eleven and win choice tickets to games which Pitt will play in the Stadium this fall?

James J. Long, sports critic and columnist, is to pick the team which will be regarded as "official." Match Mr. Long's team and you will receive a season ticket to Pitt's home games; disagree with Mr. Long regarding the merits of one player and you and a friend will be "armed" with Pitt-Notre Dame game credentials. For information regarding other prizes, and comment regarding the feats of Panthers of the distant and not-so-distant past (which will be very helpful to contest entrants) read the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph's sports columns each day.

Fill out the attached contest blank today and mail it to the Football Contest Editor. (Contest closes at midnight, next Wednesday.)

tournament play, and defeating her is an achievement reserved to the elite of the sport. But that Miss Carspecken has done so is less surprising than gratifying. The Morgantown luminary has been advancing steadily until she is now the recipient not only of the plaudits of Eastern galleries, but of glowing press reports from the most authoritative of Eastern critics.

K. E. Davis.

MISS CARSPECKEN originally developed her game at Wellesley College, Denison University and the Morgantown South Park Club, but for the last several seasons she has devoted herself diligently to the state and sectional tournaments of the East. This year her excursions have been attended with signal success, her most recent attainments being the capture of the Western Maryland singles and doubles crowns, progress to the quarter-finals of the exceedingly strong Middle States event at the Philadelphia Cricket Club, and now the seizure of the Quaker City turf court crown. She is the possessor of one of the greatest net games in the domain of women's tennis. Her volleying is superb and her smashing ranks with that of the skilled masculine performer.

FOR THAT REASON the Morgantown girl is much sought after as a doubles partner and will undoubtedly blossom forth as a serious seeker of national dual honors within the next campaign or two. She is also bringing her ground strokes along splendidly to improve her singles, a point amply attested by her victory over Miss Riegel.

And it may be said in further laudation of Morgantown's gift to top-flight tennis that Miss Carspecken wears her laurels modestly and becomingly in this day and age when athletes are prone to regard themselves, their prowess, and their prerogatives very seriously.

NOT OFTEN does a single day bring so many sport happenings of major importance as did last Saturday. Topping the list was the crowning of two new American champions, Johnny Doeg defeating Frank Shields in the final match for the national tennis title in singles, and Tommy Armour beating down Gene Sarazen in the final round for the Professional Golf Association crown.

Among the additional developments of the day were the capture of the first yacht race for the America's cup by the defender Enterprise over Shamrock V; the dropping of the Chicago Cubs from first place to third in the National League baseball pennant race; the winning of the national veterans' tennis championship by Henry H. Basford; the winning of the Futurity by George D. Widener's colt Jamestown; the action of the U. S. L. T. A. in declaring Fritz Mercur, No. 6 in the national tennis rankings, a professional, and the victory of the American women's golf team over the Canadian team. Quite an eventful day, all things considered.

Remy Kremer.

RARELY HAS ANY pitcher experienced greater difficulty in attempting to reach a particular goal than Remy Kremer, Pirate veteran, is encountering in trying to put over his twentieth victory of the season. Since he hung up his nineteenth win on August —, Kremer, who leads the National League hurlers in number of games won for the year, has made four tries for the one triumph needed to put him at the 20 mark, but has failed every time. In fact, he has not once gone the full distance. On September 1 he lost to the Cards; on September 6 he was lifted after starting against the Cubs but escaped responsibility for the game; on September 10 he lost to the Braves, and in the first game of Sunday's doubleheader against the Giants, in which he received ragged support, he was lifted again, the first of the Pirates' pair of victories during the afternoon being credited to Glenn Spencer.

YOU'D HAVE TO do some pretty deep digging into the musty baseball records to find another instance in which a major league pennant race was so close in mid-September that it had three different leaders within a little more than 24 hours. That's the latest extraordinary chapter that has been added to the thrilling story of the National League's dizzy three-cornered pennant race. Each of the three contenders has been in first place at one time or another since early Saturday afternoon, with further shifts possible today.

Before play began Saturday afternoon the Cubs were in first place with a percentage of .579, the Cardinals were second with .576 and the Robins were third with .575. Saturday night the Cards were leading with .579, the Robins were second with .577, and the Cubs were third with .574, and when yesterday afternoon's games ended the Robins, after winning their tenth straight victory, were out in front with .580, the Cards were second with .577 and the Cubs were third with .574. The slight margins separating the contenders today are due only to a difference in number of games played and won. If you figure only the "Lost" column, which is the true measure of any baseball race, the fight may be called a triple tie, as all three clubs are charged with the same number of defeats.

Hammers Beaten In Doubles Match

GREENSBURG, Pa., Sept. 15.—In a thrilling match, the Hammer brothers, Edgar (Tack) and Theodore, doubles sensations, of Greensburg, were defeated by Barclay and Johnson, of Derry, in men's doubles final at Greensburg Country Club courts yesterday.

The first set went to Hammer brothers, 2-6. The others ended 11-9, 2-6, 7-5, 6-0, with the Hammers taking the third set. The play brought to a close the club's net tournament, which has been going on for past two weeks.

In the final of mixed doubles, Helen Carson and Tack Hammer defeated Betty McKee and Dillinger Hixson, 6-3, 6-4.

MAJESTICS PRACTICE

The Majestic Radios football team will hold a practice session tomorrow evening at Phipps playgrounds. Art Rooney requests that all players report.

ALL-TIME PITT GRID CONTEST NEAR END

The Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph's All-Time Pitt Football Eleven contest enters the home stretch today.

Only three more days remain before the deadline for sending in selections. The contest ends at midnight Wednesday.

Use the blank that appears on this page today and send in your choices, if you have not already done so. Be one of the thousands who are vieing for free tickets to the Panthers' home games this season.

If you guess the same team that James J. Long, dean of local sports scribes, has selected, you will get a season pass for all of Pitt's games.

If you guess 10 of the 11 men in their proper positions you will receive two tickets for the Notre Dame game.

If you guess all but two members of the team you will receive two tickets for the Carnegie Tech game.

If you guess eight of the players you will receive a ticket for the Notre Dame game.

If you are right in seven out of 11 choices your reward will be one ticket to either the Tech or the Penn State game.

And if you get only six of the 11 right you will be able to see the Waynesburg game Saturday of next week as the guest of this newspaper.

Get in the game. The time is short and growing shorter.

Sport Vignettes

In many ways, Charley (Lefty) Williams, southpaw pitching star of the Homestead Grays, is quite the outstanding member of the famous Negro baseball team this season. . . . He has not been beaten so far and when he turned in his twenty-seventh consecutive victory last Saturday he broke a five-game losing streak of the crack aggregation. . . . The win over the Baltimore Black Sox, in the second game of a doubleheader at Forbes Field, was Victory No. 133 for the Grays this season against only 19 defeats and two ties.

The Grays are about to open a seven-game stand with the Lincoln Giants, of New York, which virtually amounts to a Negro world series, the games to be played at Forbes Field and the Yankee Stadium, New York. . . . For the first of these battles, next Saturday, some quick-change work will have to be done at the Pirates' home ballground. . . . The Duquesne University football eleven opens its season with a night game against West Virginia University there next Friday night, and the poles on which the lights will be strung will have to be taken down in time to reconvert the field for baseball purposes the following day.

Herb Drury, local hockey star, who has been employed at the Bridgeville Speedway dog-racing track, is in a bit of a quandary these days. . . . He recently purchased two of the greyhounds and now has no place to race them. . . . And they'll eat up a lot of hamburger. . . . Tough luck generally comes in bunches. . . . When Jackie Rodgers took on Johnny Erickson, a substitute, at Hickey Park recently he not only lost the decision, but was forced to go to Montefiore Hospital for treatment for a detached retina, which still has him confined. . . . The injury cost him a lucrative and well steamed-up bout with Johnny Datto at the Meyers Bowl, and now, on top of that, he has to turn down a chance to break into New York against Bushy Graham at the Queensboro Stadium on September 23. . . . The managers of Rodgers, by the way, Johnny Deutsch and James (Red) Mason, are at the parting of the ways and an important announcement bearing on their relations may be expected any day.

Again we find that the sin in many cases lies in being found out. . . . Fritz Mercur, the tennis star, just declared a professional because it is alleged he insisted on some insurance sales business in return for playing in a tournament, is the latest "horrible example." . . . How do all of the other traveling tennis kings and queens make expenses? . . . Our hockey club is to remain with us, playing on a new sort of artificial ice. . . . Now all we need is a team that will not get the "ice" from the fans. . . . Believe it or not, it takes Yankee enterprise to beat the Shamrock.—HARRY KECK.

Wilkes-Barre Cops N. Y.-Pa. Pennant

HARRISBURG, Sept. 15.—(AP.)—The New York Pennsylvania League completed its eighth season yesterday with Wilkes-Barre crowned champion for the first time since the loop was organized in 1923.

In second place, by the margin of one percentage point over Williamsport, finished the Elmira Colonels, who were left five and a half games behind the Barons at the end of their eighth unsuccessful campaign for the title.

By HARRY KECK,
Sports Editor.

The next to last boxing show of the season in the Meyers Bowl, North Braddock, is scheduled for tonight.

A double windup features the card, with Baby Joe Gans, Negro welterweight star, of California, meeting Harry (Kid) Brown, Philadelphia veteran, in the main event, and Black Bill, coal black flyweight, of Havana and New York, battling Marty Gold, another Philly vet, in the other 10-rounder.

Black Bill

In two six-round bouts, Young Nanci, of Swissvale, meets Patsy Severo, of Meadville, and Joe Gaudy, of McKeesport, boxes Steve Senich, of Homestead.

Harry Brown

FREEMAN AT RINGSIDE

Tommy Freeman, of Erie, new welterweight champion, is expected to be a ringside spectator. He is a stablemate of Severo, Jess McMahon, former matchmaker of Madison Square Garden, New York, and Tommy Ginty, Cleveland promoter, also are slated to make an appearance.

Young Rudy, of Charleroi, boxes Freddie Edwards, of Chester, W. Va., in a main bout at the Foutts Brothers' bowl, East Liverpool, O., and George Montebano, of Swissvale, battles Leo Genet, of Akron, in the eight-round semi-final to a Gorilla Jones-Cowboy Jack Willis bout at Canton, O., tonight.

Between Rounds

Battling Uzcudun has canceled his 10-round main bout with Johnny Risko at Kiss scheduled at Hinkey Park, Milwaukee, Thursday night, and Matchmaker Charley Lotz has booked a substitute bout between Willie Davies, flyweight star, of Charleroi, and Happy Atherton, of Indianapolis, who have met several times before. Davies has a win and a draw.

Hans Roberts, German welterweight, of Brooklyn, who has been going well again since returning under the management of Johnny Drotash, is being kept busy. He boxes Billy Hall, Canton Negro, in the eight-round semi-final to the Willie Davies-Happy Atherton battle at Hickey Park, Thursday night and meets Freddie Barbarin in a main bout at Kittanning, Wednesday night of next week.

Harry Williams will be one of the principals in the semi-final of the opening show at Motor Square Garden, October 6, if his injured right foot responds to treatment in time.

Promoter Jim McGirr, of McKeesport, has signed Tiger Joe Randall, Negro welterweight, of Elizabeth, to box Hal Kelly, of Cleveland, in the 10-round main bout of his second show of the indoor season, Thursday night. Lloyd Chimenti, of Swissvale, will make his professional debut against Mike Kelly, of Pittsburgh, in a six-round semi-final. Kelly claims recent victories over Frankie Chatterton and Joe Kaufman.

Ruth Gives Valuable Pointers on Throwing

BABE
MAC
HERE YOU SEE MAC ALL SET TO THROW HE'S TAKING BALL IN FRONT— HIS WEIGHT IS PROPERLY DISTRIBUTED SO THAT HE CAN GO THROUGH WITH THROWING MOTION THE MINUTE BALL HITS GLOVE.

By BABE RUTH,
Baseball's Highest Salaried Player.

"Why is it," Mac asked, "that I can throw a lot farther than Joe, but he always seems to catch runners better than I do?"

"Well, Mac," I told him, "a lot of kids don't realize it—but it isn't always a strong arm that makes the best throwing outfielder. Of course, the fellow who has a good arm naturally has the advantage, but a fellow with only a fair arm can develop into a pretty fair thrower if he plays the ball right."

"What do you mean?" Mac asked.

"I mean developing the ability to get the ball away fast," I told him. "You've got to have balance, you've got to be set to throw the minute you get the ball—and, more important than that, you've got to have your mind all made up where to throw the ball before it gets to you."

Maybe the picture will show what I mean. In this picture, you'll see that I've got Mac all set to throw even as he waits for the ball. He's taking the ball in front and you'll notice that his weight is properly distributed so that he can go through with the throwing motion the minute the ball hits his glove.

If you ever watch good big league outfielders you'll see that they always take that ball in a position that will best enable them to throw to the proper spot. For instance, if they're going to make the throw to first base, you'll see them half circle the ball, if they have time to do it, so they're facing toward the bag. I've seen Bob Meusel almost run around a high fly in order that he might be in the proper position to make the peg to the plate. Of course, Bob has a great throwing arm—but even with a weaker arm he'd still be a great thrower, for he has the ability to get the ball away fast.

Eliminate Waste Motion

That's half the secret of outfield throwing. You have to eliminate waste motion. A lot of kids have to take aim before they throw and that's bad. The third to do always is to keep on throwing balance and always let that ball go with the same motion with which you catch it.

Naturally, it's easier to throw coming in on a ball than it is when you're going back. That's why you see most outfielders playing fairly deep. They find it easier to come in than to turn and go out after a high fly.

Of course, there's one other thing about throwing from the outfield, too. You have to keep practicing. You have to throw and throw and throw until you get the motion down pat and develop control. Being able to throw a long distance is no advantage to an outfielder if he can't put that ball where he wants it.

Between long-distance and accuracy, always take accuracy—even if, to get control, you have to cut a few feet off the distance of your throw.

EDGEWOOD PAIR LEADS IN PRO-AMATEUR PLAY

By VERN SWARTSFAGER.

Jimmy O'Donnell and H. F. Miller, Jr., of the Edgewood Country Club, paced the early finishers with a sparkling 69 in the pro-amateur four-ball, best ball medal play tournament at the South Hills Country Club today. Virtually every club in the district is represented in the competition, and in most instances the club professional is paired with the club champion. George A. Ormiston, of Oakmont, secretary of the Western Pennsylvania Golf Association, is directing the play.

Ted Luther and Dr. N. P. Gillette, of Corry, Pa., with 36-34-70, were second by the margin of a single stroke.

The competition is at 36 holes, first round scores:

Jimmy O'Donnell and H. F. Miller, Jr., Edgewood, 35-34—69.

Ted Luther and Dr. N. P. Gillette, Corry, Pa., 36-34—70.

Guido Parolini and Frank Walser, St. Clair, 37-36—76.

Ben Loeffler and E. E. King, Valley Heights, 40-39—79.

Tony Factor and F. L. Connell, Brackenridge Heights, 41-40—81.

Bill Bullwinkle and Mike Prosser, Allegheny, 41-42—83.

S. A. R. TOURNEY ON

The S. A. R. golfers, with a fine field competing for the John L. Walker Low Net Trophy, the Franklin Blackstone Low Gross Trophy, and driving and putting prizes, are competing at the Wildwood Country Club, with George L. Craig, Jr., of Allegheny, chairman of the committee, in charge d'affairs.

Tomorrow the women's city championship begins at the Schenley Park municipal links with a fine field playing for Mrs. Margaret Curry's title. The qualifying round will mark the opening. The tourney will be completed Friday.

Wednesday, the Women's Golf Association resumes its team contesting at Chartiers Heights. Here's how they'll line up: Chartiers Heights vs. Fox Chapel, Stanton Heights vs. Field Club, Edgewood vs. Shannopin and Oakmont vs. Allegheny.

SENIORS PLAY

The seniors also will have a day of it Wednesday, a one-day event being slated for the Pittsburgh Field Club links.

Thursday and Friday the caddie-masters and assistant pros will stage their annual championship at the Stanton Heights Golf Club.

A mixed foursome tourney will be held at Shannopin on Thursday.

game in as many days, gave 10 hits and came close to a shutout, while homers by Dykes and Simmons helped the champions pile up a score.

Chicago's White Sox downed the Senators, 2 to 1, in a 10-inning game. Four more triumphs for the A's will assure them of nothing worse than a tie for first place. Jim Moore, a recruit from Little Rock, had all the better of General Al Crowder in a mound duel, giving only six hits and keeping every Senator away from first base from the fourth to the ninth innings. A triple by Watwood and Reynolds' single brought the deciding run.

Charley Ruffing, big New York pitcher, led the Yankees to a 10-to-3 victory over Detroit. In the one remaining contest, as the Boston-St. Louis doubleheader was rained out, He allowed the Tigers seven hits, made three of the Yanks 15 blows and drove in four runs.

GET TICKET APPLICATIONS

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(AP.)—Officials of the Brooklyn Robins, who moved into first place in the hot National League pennant fight yesterday, will receive applications for World Series tickets beginning today.

"Prices for seats," the announcement said, "will be $19.80 for a set of three box seats and $16.50 for a set of three grandstand seats. All applications must be made for three games and accompanied by a certified check or money order payable to the Brooklyn National League Baseball Club. No applicant can expect more than two sets of tickets."

SHIBE PARK SWAMPED

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 15.—(INS.)—Sack after sack of applications for world series pasteboards literally swamped employes of the Philadelphia National League ball club today as the task of sorting and filing the letters got under way.

"Much heavier than last year," Howard Crompton, Shibe Park mailman, said in describing the pile of letters.

Ten bags of mail from the North Philadelphia station were on hand when 50 women and men clerks began the task at 9 a. m. Several more bags came in from the main postoffice soon thereafter and several more are expected during the day as the mail from out-of-town cities reaches here.

SUBS GET APPLICATIONS

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—(INS.)—Ticket applications for the Chicago end of the world series—if played here—were being received today by the Chicago National League club. Approximately 34,000 reserved seats are available.

The actual distribution of tickets, if it takes place at all, will not be made until September 29.

MEETING AT TRINITY

A basketball business meeting, discussion and dinner for 75 or more boys who will participate in that sport there this winter, will be held in the Trinity Cathedral Parish House, Oliver avenue, this evening, beginning at 6:15 o'clock. Aubrey Davies will be in charge.

BUCS, GIANTS PLAY FINALE TODAY

pitcher available for this afternoon's scrap with the Giants, and Swetonic is nursing a sore finger on his throwing hand. Steve was injured in Buffalo, where the Pirates were engaged in a night game. Fred Fitzsimmons is likely to oppose Swetonic.

The Pirates are very serious in their fourth-place aspiration, although they realize they have a big contract in hand if they are to overtake the Giants. They are still two and one-half games away from their objective and they have only 13 more games on their playing card. Nevertheless, the chance of reaching the first division is strong enough to be worthy of the best efforts the Buccos can put forth.

Meantime, the Freebooters are having a circus as they crack one flag contender after another. They have been tough on the Cardinals, Cubs and Giants and they would like nothing better than to smear those Robins a couple of times when they reach the Flatbush section.

Up to yesterday, the Giants were far ahead in the season's play, but the painful setback received in the presence of so many of their supporters made the figure read 13 victories for the home team and eight for the Pirates.

PIE THROWS WIDE

Remy Kremer's mates were sorry for him yesterday and the two who grieved most were Pie Traynor and Dick Bartell. Kremer was close to a twentieth victory as he entered the seventh inning of the first game with a six-run lead. The Giants had not scored up to this point, but they managed to get a couple of earned runs across. Traynor then uncorked a wide throw that opened the way for two more runs in the inning.

Pie let loose with a second bad fling in the eighth and Bartell uncorked a high one that put the tying run in the scoring zone. Travis Jackson doubled to tie the score and Ens called for Glenn Spencer, who eventually received credit for the victory, the score being 8 to 6, but Glenn deserved his success, for he pitched like a champion and he drove in the winning run in the tenth round.

Bartell opened the tenth with a lucky hit to left. He was forced by Sulr. Suhr tole second and went to third on O'Farrell's high throw to second. Bool walked and Spencer came through with a pretty hit to center, scoring Suhr. L. Waner grounded out and Brother Paul walked to fill the bases. Comorosky came through with his fourth hit of the afternoon to score Bool. Mitchell, Pruett and Heving were McGraw's pitchers in this game.

Al Bool's long homer, with two Pirates on the sacks, was a big part of the Pirate victory. Farmer Al drove the rocket over the top of the left field stands in the big fourth inning.

Wood and French were both effective in the second game, the Buccos winning 7 to 4. The Giants only made four hits. These were made off Wood, who retired in the sixth after Terry had hit a homer into the right field stands. Pie Traynor connected for a homer to the left stands in the fourth. Walker and Donohoe were the Giant pitchers in the bobtailed contest.

SUHR SCORES PAIR

A lucky single to left by Gus Suhr led to two Pirate runs in the third inning of the last contest. Hemsley followed with a single to left, Suhr racing to third. Wood went out on an infield tap as Suhr scored, Hemsley advancing. L. Waner singled to right and Rolly scored.

Capt. Traynor hit the left field stands for a homer with one out and none on in the fourth. The fifth brought the Buccos three runs. Suhr was safe on a high toss by Terry. Hemsley hit a single to right and Gus went to third. Wood was hit on the pitching arm by Walker and the bases were filled. L. Waner singled to center to score two of his mates, Wood taking second. P. Waner sacrificed and Wood went over the plate on Comorosky's sacrifice fly.

The Giants scored twice in the fifth. Ott walked, but was forced by Hogan, but Bartell threw low in trying for a double play and Hogan went to second. Jackson doubled to left to score Hogan. Jackson scored later on Critz's single. Terry's homer added one for the Giants in the sixth and the Pirates tallied in the seventh on Hemsley's double and L. Waner's single.

Racing Car Leaves Track, Three Killed

RAFAELA, Argentina, Sept. 15.—(AP.)—Two men and a woman were killed while watching the 500-mile national automobile race here yesterday.

Driver Alberto Fontana, in making a curve, lost control of his car and ran off the track into a crowd of spectators. Driver Gaetano Damico won the national race. He completed the grind in 6 hours 4 minutes 48 4-5 seconds.

MONEY MARKET IRREGULARITIES IRONED OUT

Improvement in Bonds Offers Opportunity to Get Back to Normalcy

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—Painful as business readjustment has been, the economic machine has self-correcting qualities which in time heal the sore spots which bring about depression.

A major dislocation, which ended prosperity, was the tendency last year to suck credit and capital from all parts of the world to the whirlpool of speculation at Broad and Wall streets, gradually depriving business of urgently needed funds. The stock market, it is true, released funds again to business, but it changed the channels through which funds flowed, and the dislocation in time curtailed buying power, especially in foreign countries. Meantime production went on and it is now popular to speak, as Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, did last week, of overproduction as the cause of depression. Credit dislocations curtailed demand, and the lack of balance between production and distribution sprang from a shrinking effective demand.

Mr. Rukeyser

BOND MARKET

After a year and a quarter since business prosperity attained its peak, irregularities in the money market have been straightened out. The revival of a good bond market offers substantial business at home and abroad a new opportunity to get back to normalcy. A year ago, the excesses in speculative Wall street were tending to starve the whole world of credit, and the subnormal foreign demand for American merchandise is to some extent a result of that situation. The good bond market, and the prospects of a continuance of a heavy demand for bonds, new and old, for many months constitutes a major harbinger of nearby business recovery. Thus far this year, the public has absorbed as many new issues as ever before, if investment trust financing is eliminated on the ground that it represents double counting of capital distribution. Last week, new bond issues reached the largest total since the week of June 27.

Arguing that business revival is imminent, partly on account of the improved capital and credit situation, David Friday, brilliant economist and business prophet, who was somewhat premature last December in asserting that the bottom had been reached, points out in the Post:

"We are today confronted by a situation in which the costs of production have been greatly reduced, and in which credit is cheap, capital abundant, and in which labor and management both established a new high level of efficiency. No one is hoarding commodities — either raw materials or finished goods. Everyone is anxious to move them freely into trade at reasonable prices. But even with prices far under those of recent years, the business man can make a fair margin of profit on a fair volume of business. Whenever depression has brought industry to this state, business revival is imminent."

MONEY POLICY

Eugene Meyer, Jr., sagacious new governor of the Federal Reserve Board, will doubtless seek impartially to analyze the warning of Dr. B. M. Anderson, of the Chase National Bank, formerly economist of Harvard University, that the Federal Reserve, in its eagerness to spur a return of prosperity, has been giving the country overdoses of cheap money. A similar criticism was set forth in this column on August 20 in an interview with B. H. Beckhart, Columbia University authority. The fear of both economists is that Reserve limits will necessitate a reversal of the present superlatively easy money policy before business revival has been fully able to get under way. The suggestion is that the Reserve give the easy money tonic in slightly smaller doses, and not be influenced too much by the alleged propaganda value of cheap money in times of business pessimism.

Efforts since Labor Day to challenge the authenticity of the late summer stock market rally are healthy. Delay in using the same methods during the spring allowed the upturn to go further than conditions warranted, and the subsequent collapse in May and June was all the more precipitate. The present turn in business, largely, though not entirely, seasonal in character, seems well grounded, but it should be borne in mind that in midsummer business was 16 per cent below computed normal and the trend, though distinctly upward, is still in the subnormal zone. Accordingly, in order to avoid emotional excesses, marketwise and elsewhere, it is necessary to speak of the changing character of business in mathematical, rather than in literary, terms. The trend is distinctly toward normal, and many industrial executives and economists expect normal business before the close of 1931. If these expectations are fulfilled, the call is for tempered optimism, not for unreasoning fears.

Seek Sound Credit Basis For Home Building

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—(AP.)—Definite steps have been taken by affiliated industries to further the plan of President Hoover for more widespread home building and home ownership on a sound credit basis.

This became known here when the Associated General Contractors of America announced a plan for the creation of a residence contractors' section of the association's building division which is expected to be approved and launched at the fall board meeting early next month.

Although the association heretofore has been primarily devoted to the problems of the larger contractors as a group, leaders of the industry now feel some national trade association should be provided the residence builder to assist him in bettering present trade practices and help him in promoting the construction of more and better homes.

New Standards Needed

IN TAKING THIS STEP toward providing for the affiliation of the residence contractors with the national association, special attention will be given to elevate methods of promotion, quality of workmanship, appraisal methods and conditions in the second mortgage field to a sound basis. The present depression, the association says, has given emphasis to the fact that the credit system in home building is not as soundly organized as other branches of credit and this subject will be one of the important questions to be dealt with by the board.

Building and loan associations and other financial institutions, small house architects, building supply interests, manufacturers of home building materials, real estate men and other agencies directly involved in the field will be invited to meet on common ground, set up new standards of procedure and initiate soundly conceived active programs for the stimulation of home building, the creation of new confidence in the minds of the public and work out equitable solutions to the numerous ills that at present hinder the effective functioning of this branch of construction.

U. S. Leads Tire Business

THE UNITED STATES CONTINUES to maintain by a wide margin its position as chief supplier in the world automobile tire trade.

A Department of Commerce statement gives American exports of this commodity for the first half of 1930 as 1,448,000 units or approximately one-third of the total for the eight leading exporting countries.

The world tire trade during the six months under discussion declined 12 per cent while the United States, considered alone, showed a decline of 14 per cent. This decline was relatively small as compared with that of some other countries, particularly France with a decline of 28 per cent, 20 per cent for Belgium, 26 per cent for Japan and 28 per cent for Italy. Canada's loss was 14 per cent. The United Kingdom and Germany were the only nations registering increases as compared to last year's period, the former showing a gain of 37 per cent and Germany 15 per cent. No breakdown is made by the department showing what percentage of England's exports are from American branches, but this class of business by local firms in Great Britain is tremendous.

Inquiries Feature Electric Markets

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—A strong flow of inquiry is the mainstay of current activity in the nation's electrical equipment markets, Electrical World reports. Buying is slow and sales are still in moderate volume, but improvement is believed to be definitely on the way.

BEARS' ATTACK ENCOUNTERS DULLNESS

Same Obstacle as Bulls Faced Blocks Opponents; Rally Fails to Hold Up

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(AP.) — The bears took another fling at the stock market today, but ran into the same obstacle their professional opponents have encountered — dullness.

Failure of the Saturday rally to do much more than eliminate that day's early declines, leaving the market lower on the week, encouraged renewed operations by the shorts, who hammered with especial vigor at the utility, steel and merchandise shares. The result of the German elections, reflected in selling on the Berlin Bourse, may also have contributed to the weakening of speculative sentiment.

RALLY FAILS

Heaviness at the opening was followed by the vestiges of a rally as week-end selling orders were disposed of, but the list soon resumed its downward course. Shares losing 3 points or more included R. H. Macy, Safeway Stores, American Telephone, American Can, American Power and Light, Foster Wheeler, Gulf States Steel and Lackawanna. U. S. Steel, Crucible Steel, Woolworth, International Harvester, General Electric, Johns-Manville, Loew's and American Tobacco new slumped about 2 points. Case and Allied Chemical lost half a dozen points, and Du Pont, Westinghouse Electric and Eastman Kodak dropped 4. American Water Works, which rallied briskly on Saturday, rose another point but yielded its advance. Auto Strop moved up 5 points.

Business news was meager. Reports on the general situation in commerce and industry stressed the seasonal improvement in some lines, calling attention particularly to gains in car loadings and steel production and to signs of stabilization in electric power output as well as many of the commodities. Some of the commentators, however, said it would be unwise at this time to put too much confidence in an upturn of more than seasonal proportions.

Grain prices showed little more than moderate firmness in the early dealings and turned slightly reactionary toward noon, which was disquieting.

INVESTMENT MARKET

The investment character of the present security markets continued to be emphasized in the firmness of high-grade bonds and in the demand for preferred stocks. A large majority of the two score shares making new highs last week were in this class, indicating the cautious attitude of the investing public, although commission houses report a slightly better demand for seasoned common shares at prices below the market.

Call money, renewing at 2½ per cent, dropped to 2, the first ease in some time in the official rate. This is the day of the quarterly turnover in the money markets incident to the government refinancing. The Treasury's overdraft at the Federal Reserve in this connection, it was said, probably would be between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000, but the central bank was understood to have planned sale of participations to the larger banks so as to avoid such a sharp collapse of interest rates as occurred six months ago.

Gain in Refined Copper Stocks Cited Factor In Selling Move.

The increase of roughly 25,000 tons in refined copper stocks on hand as of the end of August, leaving a net gain of about 17,000 tons in total refined and blister stocks, was being cited as one of the factors back of the general selling movement in the market. It was contended that the showing was decidedly disappointing and as suggesting little likelihood of early change in the situation. But in considering these statistics it is well to keep one point in mind. That is that foregoing stocks include a certain amount of copper sold for deferred delivery. What percentage of the total the amount of such copper really constitutes is not made available, still it might prove interesting and reassuring were it possible for copper interests to make that particular data public.

Corporation officials these days are showing a disposition to fight "at the drop of the hat" as the old saying goes. For several days now report has been current that interests back of Gold Dust and several other companies have been moving to obtain control of Ward Baking. The head of the Gold Dust Corporation would not comment on reports that he was making ready for a campaign to corral proxies with that end in view. But evidently his silence has been accepted in Ward circles as amounting to confirmation of such reports. At any rate Ward directors have already taken the jump in what may prove a struggle for control and have dispatched a communication to shareholders of the company requesting their support in such event.

Although public buying is still limited, the demand which has been evident in the food shares recently indicates that this group is coming into greater favor with outsiders as well as traders. Probably no other group of companies has suffered less from the business depression, and there is a growing feeling that these stocks will give a good market account of themselves when a general and sustained upward movement starts.

That the commodity declines are disturbing is admitted on all sides. When wheat and corn react there seems to be a cessation of the activities on the part of some of the traders working for higher prices in stocks, and as a result rallies are interrupted. This is due apparently to the fact that so many professionals are interested in commodities as well as stocks. Pronounced weakness in one of these markets logically can be expected to bring sympathetic liquidation in the other. Such selling has been seen on various occasions in the past few months.

Conservative interests continue cautious. They are warning customers against buying stocks indiscriminately, and most of them favor accepting profits on part of the long positions when rallies are in progress. Purchases are favored by a few in the leading stocks, but clients are being urged to wait for a good-sized reaction and then pick up the standard issues in small lots on a scale.

Persistent selling has come into J. I. Case at times recently, and while Wall Street was inclined to attribute this supply to weakness in commodity markets, it is evident that considerable liquidation has been in progress. Absence of support at times has resulted in sharp reactions in the stock, which have affected other departments in the market.

Lower Trend in Stocks of Meats

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—Total stocks of meats in cold storage were reported by the Department of Agriculture at 699,738,000 pounds compared with 847,112,000 pounds on September 1, last year. Frozen poultry was set at 42,629,000 pounds, compared with 49,010,000 pounds a year ago and creamery butter, 143,096,000 pounds compared with 168,952,000 pounds.

Holdings of case eggs were reported at 10,375,000 cases, compared with 8,547,000 cases on September 1, a year ago. Stocks of lard were placed at 89,140,000 pounds compared with 180,085,000 pounds last year.

Garrison to Head Bankruptcy Quiz

WASHINGTON.—(AP.) — The Department of Justice has announced that Lloyd K. Garrison of New York, has been appointed a special assistant to the attorney general and will direct the investigation being made into administration of the bankruptcy law throughout the United States.

Gen. Fireproofing At 75% Capacity

YOUNGSTOWN, Sept. 15.—Current operations of General Fireproofing Company are at 75 per cent of capacity and orders on books insure continuance of that rate for the rest of the year. The aluminum chair business is reported as at a satisfctory rate.

NEW YORK CURB MARKET

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—The selling movement in evidence at the close last week on the Curb continued today. Bearish pressure was concentrated upon a miscellaneous group of stocks, and some were carried to the lowest point on the current reaction.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(AP.)—Following is the list of transactions on the New York Curb Exchange, giving all stocks and bonds traded (00 omitted in sales column of stock list; 000 omitted in sales column of bond list):

Forbes

Forbes Learns Huge Concerns Buying Ahead.

By B. C. FORBES

B. C. Forbes

A VERY important development has not heretofore been made known. I understand that last week three of America's most important corporations began placing extensive orders for future delivery of raw materials.

DETAILS are not yet available, I learn however, that the departure from hand-to-mouth ordering was very marked that definite contracts were placed for delivery extending in some cases into the second quarter of next year.

MY INFORMATION—unofficial—is that the commodities and materials contracted for away ahead include copper, cotton, sugar, rubber, coffee, wheat and certain other materials regarded as selling under cost of production.

THE LARGEST copper producers, it is intimated, are not willing to accept unlimited orders at current prices. Commercial smelters handling business for independent producers, have been leading in price-cutting. After arbitrarily holding prices at an unduly high level, leaders in the copper industry have changed their tactics completely. A copper price of less than 11 cents is not calculated to encourage so-called "marginal" properties to continue operating. Saturday's report, revealing an increase of fully 25,000 tons in August bringing stocks to the highest total (347,688 tons) since 1921, explains why the dominating companies welcome less competition from independent mines.

THE WRITER hopes to obtain more information concerning the attitude now taken by leading corporations concerning stocking up with raw supplies. If this movement extends substantially it may mark the definite turning-point in the general price trend. Large scale ordering of future supplies would not only have a direct influence upon prices but would unquestionably have far-reaching psychological effects.

IN BOTH financial and business circles one constantly hears the sentiment expressed:

"If the right leadership would only step forward, the whole attitude throughout the nation could be changed."

Said one of our internationally-known men of affairs intimately in touch alike with finance, industry and the government:

"If executives and bankers and others in influential positions could only be induced to change the slant of their eyes, our whole economical complexion would promptly improve. There is far too much looking down, not nearly enough looking up. Pessimism has become a habit."

He added:

"The policy pursued by not a few of our foremost men of affairs has been regrettably shortsighted. There has been too strong a tendency to consider only the immediate effect of action taken. The larger effect of such action—its influence upon social and even political sentiment, especially among the working classes—has not apparently been given adequate thought. After all, the masses are entitled to look to leaders for leadership. Those entrusted with the well-being of great bodies of workers have a responsibility beyond that to their stockholders at a time like this."

SEPTEMBER, as was to be expected, has brought some increase in activity. Pronounced irregularity persists.

Wheat fell to the lowest prices of the season before the week ended, to within a fraction of 80 cents for September delivery at Chicago. Corn lost ground despite the lower indicated crop. So did beef, although pork more than held its own. Rubber sank to a new minimum price, representing a drop of fully 50 per cent from the year's peak. Cotton came near the season's bottom price. Copper was nominally held at 11 cents, but concessions were reported.

Irregularity ruled also in the stock market, with average prices ending the week moderately lower. Call money was unofficially quoted at as low as 1½ per cent, although the 2 per cent official rate was maintained. Brokers' loans increased $33,000,000, but the federal reserve system's ratio of reserve rose ½ to 1 per cent to 81.3 per cent.

THE FEELING is spreading that things will continue to improve moderately. The stock market is regarded as having been thoroughly liquidated. It is significant that when quotations drop, activity lessens. The mercantile agencies report various symptoms of betterment, but not enough to warrant definite conclusions that anything more than ordinary seasonal quickening of the trade pace has actually set in.

The writer inclines to the optimistic view.

Structural Steel Price Advanced

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—The structural steel board of trade announces an advance of about 6 per cent in the price of structural steel for all fabricated products used in building construction in metropolitan area of New York.

HOW'S BUSINESS?

ACTUAL FACTS ON CONDITIONS TODAY

By FRELING FOSTER

National Park Visitors Break Record

The number of sightseeing visitors to the 15 important national parks of the United States during the first seven months of 1930 is compared with those in the corresponding periods of the past nine years. The figures, therefore, include July, the largest month of each year. Source: National Park Service, U. S. Department of the Interior.

Apparently 1930 has been the greatest year for vacations in the history of the United States. Two of the most comprehensive vacation indexes—number of passports issued and the number of visitors to national parks—are at record-breaking levels this year. They indicate not only the existence of abundant purchasing power, but show that this purchasing power can be brought into action when the commodity or service has a powerful appeal—like a vacation.

NEW YORK BOND MARKET

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—Changes in the bond market at the commencement of the new week were mixed today. Trading was nominal and buying interest centered in a select list of railroad and utility issues which ruled steady to firm. The foreign list was irregular on a slightly lower trend in evidence.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15 (AP).—Trade activity in the most active bonds on the New York Stock Exchange today were as follows, 000 omitted in sales (except United States bonds in dollars and thirty-seconds of dollars):

DAILY TRUE STORY

What—No Alibi?

"What is your line of work, may I ask?"

Nothing in the world would stop Mrs. Pardee from asking that question of every prospective boarder.

"I write," Tim Leighton answered.

Mrs. Pardee frowned.

"The—uh—rate is always a week in advance."

"Because I write?" Tim asked, but he paid her from a prosperous looking roll, which made Mrs. Pardee forget to frown for the moment.

"Oh, no, not at all because you write—it is just a precaution—one has to be careful. What do you write, may I ask?"

Tim wanted to say, "You may," but decided it would be better to be friendly to the woman who was to supply his food and lodgings.

"Fiction, mostly, Mrs. Pardee."

"Day or night?"

"What is the difference between a day and night fiction?" Tim asked, amused and puzzled.

"I mean, do you write in the day or night. If you write at night you will have to get one of those noiseless typewriters so as not to annoy my other guests."

"I do not write in my room. I have a little place down-town where I do my writing."

"Splendid," Mrs. Pardee said.

It was nearly dinner time. Tim sat on the wide red sandstone steps out front, because it was cooler there in the late afternoon shade.

A young man came along and slouched down beside him.

"You gonna take a chance on the old lady's show?" he asked.

"How is it?"

"I been boardin' here a year—it's pretty good."

"Well, I'll risk a week at it," Tim informed him.

Beautiful Girl

"You'd hafta do that or lose your advance. She wouldn't give you a toothpick on credit."

A girl was approaching. Tim could see that she was a beauty. He was surprised when she started up the steps. He promptly stood up. The other chap remained seated, merely saying, "Hello."

As soon as she was inside Tim said, "Does she board here?"

"Yes, but don't get excited, brother, you ain't got a chance. Nobody has. Her old man watches her like a hawk."

"Who is she? What does she do?"

"Name's Jennings. Marion Jennings. Works in some office."

A tinkling sound from inside could be heard.

"Soup's on," the young man said, with a grin.

They went inside. Four or five people were already at the long table. A red-faced, but neat girl with a white apron indicated a place at the long table for Tim.

There were three smaller tables. Tim made a guess that they were for the star boarders. Mrs. Pardee came in and sat at the head of the long table and introduced Tim to those at that table.

The young man, Bill Ormond, had been right. The food was good.

Just then the girl came in with her father—the beautiful one. They sat at the small table across from Tim. Her father caught Tim eyeing her and scowled at him. Tim nodded pleasantly and kept on staring at the girl until she looked his way, then he averted his glances.

After dinner Tim invited Bill up to his room for a smoke, he said. In reality he wanted information about the Jennings girl.

"Oh, she's a looker—too bad her old man keeps her chained down like he does," Bill said, in reply to Tim's remark that she was as pretty a girl as he had ever seen.

"I asked her to go to a show with me about the third day I was here. Before she had a chance to answer her old man turned on me. 'My daughter does not run around with strangers, young man,' he says to me. 'Well,' I says back to him, 'we've been introduced and we wouldn't be strangers long.'"

"And then?"

Talks With Girl

"That's all. She smiled at me. She smiles at all of us. Now and then she goes out with her old man. They say she makes big money, secretary for Rockman—down in Wall Street. Her old man is an auctioneer when he works. I got a hunch he loafs mostly and lets her support him. They got the rooms right under you. They say she has the bedroom and he sleeps on a cot pulled across the sittin' room door so's she can't sneak out."

Bill said a lot more, about many other things, but Tim was not interested.

It was about a week later that Marion Jennings came home when Tim was on the front steps. They had been introduced and had spoken a few words to each other, but in the presence of her father.

This time she stopped as Tim stood up.

"Oh, Mr. Leighton," she said, "Mrs. Pardee tells me that you are an author. I'm awfully interested in authors."

"That's tough on me, Miss Jennings—you see I didn't tell Mrs. Pardee that I was an author. She was rather nosey about what I did so I said that I wrote. Well, I do write. I write quotations on a big board for Simmons & Simmons."

"Oh! Well, I don't blame you for telling Mrs. Pardee what you did—she is terribly nosey. Don't you get tired of stock quotations?"

"They burn me up. Honestly, I feel as if my ears were sticking straight out, listening to the telegraph ticker."

"Oh, you take it from the sounder—you know telegraphy?"

"Yes, I know the darn stuff."

"So do I. Had to learn it so that I could take certain code messages for Mr. Rockman. I can send, too."

"You see, Miss Jennings, I didn't really lie to Mrs. Pardee."

"Of course not, you do write of course."

"I told h— some of it was fiction—it is by the time I get a quotation up on the board, the stuff has probably risen, or more probably, dropped a point."

Marion laughed, but stopped suddenly and seemed to be embarrassed, perhaps a bit frightened. Her father was coming up the steps. He was scowling at Tim.

"Hello, Mr. Jennings," Tim said.

"Lo." It was more like a grunt. He held the front door open. Marion went in. He closed it with a bang, remaining outside. He turned to Tim.

Father Angry

"I don't want you to annoy my daughter," he said, sharply.

"Perfectly natural of you, Mr. Jennings. I'm sure. No parent wants his child annoyed."

"Er—ahem! What I mean is—I mean I don't want you to annoy my daughter."

Jennings was red in the face.

"I'm pretty quick to catch on. I understand your general idea the first time, Mr. Jennings. Has anyone been complaining?"

"I'm warning you."

"Thanks." Tim lighted a cigaret and smiled amiably.

Jennings stood about for a moment, and then went inside.

During the next few weeks Tim met Marion on the front steps whenever possible, just for a few words with her. One rainy day he went down to the subway station and met her with an umbrella.

Only once she spoke of her father.

"You mustn't mind him, Tim," she said. They had got to the stage where they used first names.

"But couldn't you go some place with me? Don't you like to dance?"

"Love it, but father won't let me. Mother has been dead three years now, but he seems to think it is too soon for me to go around or have any fun."

All through the winter Tim managed to get a few words with Marion. One evening, on the steps, she said, "Would you do me a favor?"

"Anything in the world."

"Never tell—" she handed him an envelope, "but please buy Uxton for me the first thing in the morning."

"Gosh, Marion—that crazy stuff?"

"Please—please do as I say. And if—if you ever take a little plunge, you ought to buy some yourself."

"Of course I'll do it for you—I'll bring back the receipt."

Tim thought it over that evening when he saw that the envelope contained 10 one hundred dollar bills. Marion must have been saving for a long while. He wondered what old Rockman paid her—Rockman! That was the solution. John J. Rockman was one of the biggest men in the street. Marion probably had a sure thing inside tip!

Tim did not have a fortune, but he plunged three of his total four thousand on Uxton.

By noon he noticed that it was climbing. By night it had made four points.

He had no chance to speak to Marion. He tried to question her with his eyes, but it didn't work. He hung about in the front hall to get a word. He got it, a whisper as she passed him.

"Bath room pipe."

Stock Climbs

It didn't take him long to figure that out. He went to his room. With his pocket knife he tapped on the wash bowl pipe. His bath room would be right over Marion's.

"Up four—better sell," he ticked off on the pipe in the Morse alphabet.

"Don't sell—wait for my signal," was the message he got back.

Uxton continued to climb. It wasn't spectacular but steady. It didn't attract much attention. Tim's boss did speak of it. "Somebody is riding for a fall," was his comment.

On the fourth night Tim tapped out "Better sell."

"Wait," came the reply.

It was exactly seven days later that he got the tapped-out word from her. "Sell the first thing in morning."

"O. K.," he answered.

He sold and found that he had turned his three thousand into exactly thirty-five times that amount!

He slipped Marion's check to her that night just a split second before her father came along. Jennings glared at him and took Marion in.

Tim became bold. With his fork at the table he ticked off [illegible]

Translated, it is a very ancient statement, reading, "I love you."

Marion answered briefly:

"Same here."

"Don't rattle your fork. It makes me nervous." Tim heard her father say. He laughed. The others thought he was silly to laugh at nothing.

The next night Marion didn't come home. Her father found a note to the effect that she was at that time, Mrs. Timothy Leighton and on the way to the Coast on a honeymoon!

This Day in History Fifty Years Ago.

SARA'S TANTRUM

SARA BERNHARDT IN A HYSTERICAL FIT BEHIND THE SCENES. MOBILE, ALA.

NOTE—After considerable research we have accumulated historical data concerning goings-on fifty years ago, which (unless the authorities intervene) will be presented occasionally with more or less regard for accuracy.

MOBILE, Ala.—Again the press is obliged to chronicle the tantrum of the great French star who is astounding the American people.

The curtain rose in Temperance Hall at the appointed hour. The house was a fine one; the most select we have seen in this city. Mlle. Bernhardt had been back of the stage since 6:30 o'clock, and had perpetrated some very sarcastic jokes about the dressing-room, its lack of Brussels carpets, marble bathrooms, etc. Persons began to notice that Mademoiselle faisate la mous; or, as we say in English, was working herself up into a tantrum. When she appeared on the stage she did not acknowledge the reception. She began talking with a rapidity and volubility.

It was plain that the play was being guyed. She giggled; she laughed; she screamed; she could not speak her lines, and finally she rushed off the stage in a very unceremonious manner; leaving the promoter to ring down the curtain. The result was a hysterical fit. Her screams could be heard a block away. Schlessinger's orchestra tried their best to drown the shrieks by playing, but the music grated so on Mademoiselle's ears that it had to be stopped. Dr. Heiustis stepped in front of the curtain with Mr. Snow and announced the play could not be continued.

A New York publishing firm has agreed to bring out a volume of poetry written by John Cabbage, a worker on one of the city's garbage disposal scows.

In return, Poet Cabbage should agree to take out some of the oversupply of fiction on his next trip.

It was certainly smart of Mr. Cabbage to go to work on a garbage scow if he's seeking inspiration for a literary career.

Or mebbe it is all just a publicity stunt by which he expects to land a writing job in Hollywood.

Register Tomorrow and Avoid Rush of Last Day

Political leaders of both the major parties have joined with the Registration Commission in urging citizens who have not already done so to register tomorrow, so they may be qualified to vote in the November election. Of course there is another day, October 4, on which to register, but it will be bad policy to postpone until then this important civic duty, because there is always a rush on the last day and it promises to be worse than usual this year.

In preparation for the introduction of voting machines the election districts have been reduced in number and enlarged, which means that there will be more or less congestion and confusion. There is always the possibility, too, that if one postpones a task until the last possible moment something will come up to interfere with doing it. The prudent policy is not to delay.

The registration on the first day was deplorably small. Indifference is also reflected in the small percentage of citizens who have paid the occupation tax and thus qualified to register.

It is to be hoped the impression does not prevail that the forthcoming election is not important, or that there is no contest. It is by no means certain that the primary settled everything.

Better Co-Operation on Boulevards Is Desirable

Correspondence that has been made public between L. W. Monteverde, chairman of the Department of City Planning, and Norman F. Brown, Allegheny County's director of public works, suggests that the county has not co-operated with the city as it should in plans for the Allegheny River Boulevard and the Sawmill Run Boulevard.

The Planning Commission has sought to correlate the county's new boulevards with the city's major highway system in such a way that traffic would flow smoothly. It has aimed, particularly, to prevent traffic congestion at the south portal of the Liberty Tunnels, and at the intersection of the Allegheny River Boulevard with the Washington Boulevard. In concerning itself with these matters the Planning Commission has, of course, been doing no more than its duty.

It is regrettable, therefore, to note in the correspondence regarding the Allegheny River Boulevard that Brown has not been as eager to discuss the matter with the Planning Commission's engineers as he might have been.

As Monteverde says, the commission is entitled to have the early, continuous and open-minded co-operation of the county authorities in the solution of problems arising from the co-ordination of city and county projects.

Photographers Becoming More and More Useful

The fact that a thousand delegates are expected to attend the convention of the Photographers' Association of the Middle Atlantic States, opening in Pittsburgh today, bears witness to the steadily increasing importance of their profession.

It is too bad they are not meeting here at a time when the annual photographic salon of the Academy of Science and Art was being held at Carnegie Institute; for it is one of the finest exhibitions to be found anywhere, brings pictures from many parts of the world, and proves indisputably that photography must now be considered as one of the fine arts.

However, it is in its utilitarian rather than in its artistic aspects that the progress of photography is most striking. New uses for photography are found almost daily. At a trial here a few months ago in which it was proposed to take the jury to the scene of the crime the prosecutor decided it was unnecessary as photographs would serve the purpose just as well. In another case recently it was necessary to have a copy at once of a voluminous typewritten manuscript. Preparations were made to put a number of typists to work, and then someone thought of photostats, and saved time and money. For many purposes photographs taken from airplanes are supplanting maps.

Youths in doubt as to what occupation they shall take up as their life-work would do well to consider photography.

State Has Bumper Crop Of Oats Despite Drought

"Count your many blessings," the hymn bids us. Here is one that is brought to mind by the announcement that James M. Wray, an Armstrong County farmer, has raised 1,050 bushels of oats this summer on a tract of 17 acres—and oats, it is added, of unusually fine quality.

Pennsylvania has a bumper crop of oats this year. Notwithstanding the drought the harvest is turning out exceptionally well. The yield is much better than last year, much better than it was expected to be a month ago.

The crop is placed at 39,405,000 bushels for the whole state, as against a five-year average of 37,308,000 bushels. The average yield per acre is placed at 37 bushels, as compared with a five-year average of 34.3 bushels.

Farmer Wray's yield averages more than 61 bushels per acre. That is good farming.

The drought was harmful—there is no doubt of that. But at any rate there is to be no shortage of oatmeal, that hearty food which has made the Scotch so sturdy.

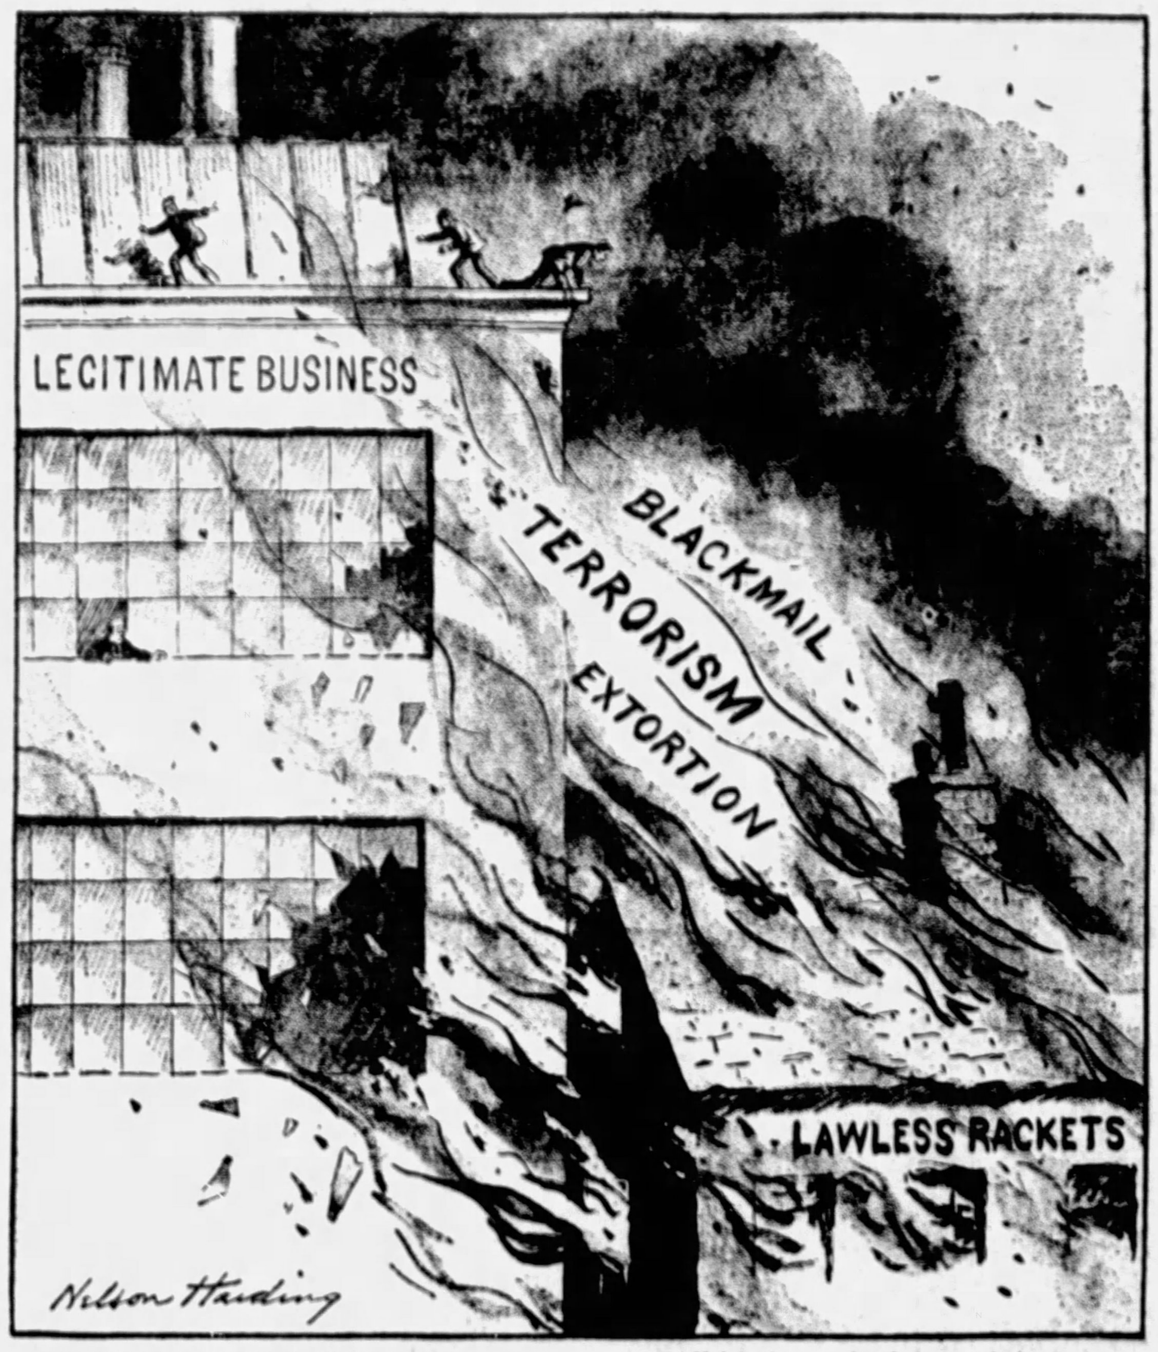
The Fire Spreads

By Nelson Harding



The house next door is all ablaze,
And now the flames are breaking
Into the building that contains
A lawful undertaking.

Unless that growing fire's quenched,
It soon wil burn much faster;
And catching here and spreading there
Bring ruin and disaster.

"Bugs" Baer Says:

Putt, Putt, Putt

A miniature golfer is only a jaywalker with a weapon.

He carries the deadly unconcealed putter and whacks to the right and left, nor standeth upon the order of his diveting.

He putts, he putteth and he puttereth. And having puttexed, he putteroos, thereby being "Bugs" Baer all preamble and no constitution. His standing in the scheme of things is one who beats a path to a mouse trap.

And now the miniature golf sancers have gone in for advertising on a magnificent diminuendo.

Dwarf Terrace: Play thimble polo in the heart of the retail district. Fifty cents an hour unless otherwise annoyed. Winter rules for those overcome by the heat.

Debris Country Club: This course was one of the finest junk yards in the country. We have remodeled it and made it worse.

Congested Park: Spend a night in the great outdoors stepping over queer things and crawling through stove-pipes. We have cornered the supply of broken dishes and busted sofas. Know the great joy of smacking an old exhausted grape fruit through a hoss collar.

Midget Esplanade: The finest miniature golf course in the world. Rub elbows with millionaires. If you want to know life in the raw peel an onion.

Pee Wee Golf Course: Start on the little course and then graduate to the finest links ever built on a door mat. Why walk all over the world chasing a golf ball when you can stay home and telephone your putts to a caddy?

Junk Villa: The home of the miniature golfer. Our country club house is an old soap box in the English manner. We use ferrets for caddies. You cannot lose a ball if you don't hit it.

The wide open spaces have been sub-divided into suburban soup stains. Every time a housewife shakes a tablecloth 17 golfers fall out. We don't know where the world is going, but we don't want to be here when it gets back. They drove the saloon off the corner and now papa staggers around all night just the same on a miniature curio shop full of odds that never end.

If you think that is an improvement how would you like to see Niagara Falls cut up into Turkish baths? We don't say that miniature golf is filling the sanitariums and nut factories. But it's emptying 'em and a lot of guards are going to be fired for laxity on duty.

We play the game every night and the sensation is exactly like sewing a button on without any thread in the needle.

SCIENCE AND CHANCE

By Archibald Henderson

In human life, there is an unpredictable element, too elusive ever to be pinned down or foreseen. Some people call it Luck, meaning good luck. But luck may be bad, as well as good; or it may be neutral. It is unlikely that the utmost effort of human intelligence will ever compose this mysterious problem. For when we say chance, we are speaking of the unknown. And for all his many gifts and powers, man has not been endowed with the gift of foresight, the faculty of prophecy.

In the days of the Roman Republic, Fortune was the Goddess of Fate. She was the arbiter of human destiny. But in time man came to feel that rewards were not meted out in accordance with men's deserts. Fortuna was a fickle and capricious mistress. And so in the time of the Roman Empire, Fortuna became the Goddess of Chance.

To the determinist, there is no such thing as the adventitious. What must be, must be. Character is destiny. Within every human being are found the seeds of success or failure, prosperity or disaster. God has willed it so. Causes inevitably have effects; and the effects are inevitably pre-determined by the antecedent causes. A deity, omniscient in intelligence, must foresee each event; and if anything is known in advance, there can be no element of chance. The things which happen must happen.

In the lack of omniscient intelligence, science steps in as an imperfect substitute. Science cannot tell you anything about a single event, but it can reach valid conclusions, of remarkable accuracy, regarding an extended chain of events. Its conclusions are based upon an endless number of happenings, or as we say, an infinite number.

Let us consider, for example, the following results of play at Monte Carlo. At roulette, in the entire history of Monte Carlo, neither red nor black has ever appeared more than 26 times in succession. Why has red, for example, not appeared 27 times in succession—or 57 times in succession, or 107 times in succession?

What answer has science to give to this question? Or has it an answer? Certainly, it has an answer which seems simplicity itself, when understood. Calculation, according to the mathematical theory of probability, shows that 26 repetitions of a color should occur once in about 67 million throws, whereas a series of 27 would occur once in about 134 million throws.

It has been estimated that since Monte Carlo was opened as a gambling resort, not less than 100,000,000 coups at roulette have been produced. Quite a number more than that may have been produced. On a rough basis, let us say that 110,000,000 coups have been made. Eliminating all imperfections in the machine, from consideration, it is clear why a run of 27 repetitions has not been made; since that would occur only once in 134,000,000 coups. The chance for the 27 repetitions to occur lies in the 24,000,000 coups yet to be made.

As Norwood Young acutely observes in Fortuna: without attempting to prophesy, it is pertinent to observe that we have at Monte Carlo an example of the manner in which the egotistical fancies which every human being carries about with him, may be exploited by a Society. Thus Chance is governed by Design.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

What were the Big Times in your life? What happenings meant most to you—did most for you?

Looking back, you'll probably think of High Spots. Your last year in college—something doing every minute. Your big love affair. The time the bank failed. The time you had that big fight with the family. The time Uncle Grove left you that $1,500. The year of the flood.

"Those were my Big Times," you'll say. "They made life interesting. The rest was just humdrum—nothing happened."

And you sigh wistfully. You think how wonderful your life would have been if there'd been more Big Times. You think how much more you could have accomplished if your years hadn't been wasted in those monotonous stretches when "nothing happened."

But you're wrong, Partner. Those exciting episodes were not your real Big Times. It's easy to think that they were, but it's childish. That's the way youngsters think—reckoning life from one party to another. But the really important periods in life aren't the boiling points . . . but the long quiet intervals between when we're slowly building, slowly learning, getting ready for the next test. The hum-drum times that we so resent, they are the really important periods in life. They are the times when things actually happen . . . when the vital processes of life go on.

You feel that you live most during excitement. As a matter of fact, you live least during such times. A great deal is happening around you, but very little is happening to you. You feel more important because of all the noise and confusion and excitement, but you're actually hardly living at all. You're just whirling around, like a woodtick in a cyclone. Your times of real power and progress come when you're doing your stuff alone, in the quiet cycle of the days. Those are your Big Times.

A man's strength or weakness isn't determined by the number of parties, fires, murders, elopements, bankbreaks, conventions and other forms of boo-coo whoopee he's attended. It's determined by the life he has lived inside himself—by his own inner whoopee or whines, his secret triumphs or surrenders. There lies the true record of his growth, and life will test him by that record.

Some day Luck will come to you with an offer, or Fate with a demand. You're sure now that you'll jump at that offer or rise to that emergency. Maybe you won't. Undoubtedly you'll want to, but it will all depend not on how you feel THEN but on how you're feeling NOW . . . What you're doing with yourself NOW in the hum-drum time when no one's looking on. If you're carrying on now, you will carry on then. If you're lying down now you will lie down then, though.

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS.

Accustomed Eyes

The rarest beauty often leaves men cold,
Its glories waning in accustomed eyes
That fail, through very nearness, to behold
The loveliness an eager world would prize.
Athena's charm, Diana's glowing grace,
These might grow dim across an inglenook;
The lure might wither from fair
Helen's face
And all the wonder fade from Psyche's look.

And so it is that perfect beauty dwells
But seldom on the earth, and briefly then;
The evanescence of its charm compels
A rapt allegiance in the hearts of men.
Too fleet is beauty for their sight
to tire;
Each granted glimpse but stirs
a new desire.

Text for Today

And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day.—John, vi: 40.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE

By H. G. WELLS
In Collaboration With
Prof. Julian Huxley and George P. Wells.

But once approximately pure lines have been established, the appearance of new gene-changes can be spotted; and in this way at least two mutations which modify the hooded pattern have been identified by Castle. One of these was in the same direction as the selection that was going on; selection in this line was being made for more black, and the new mutation was a black-extender.

It was incorporated by selection in the germ-plasm of this line; and thus the range of variation was still further enlarged in the black direction.

H. G. Wells

Exactly the same sort of thing happens in Nature, only on a grander, looser scale and over vastly longer periods. Castle's work teaches us two vital facts.

First, selection in a cross-bred stock can bring about the recombination of existing genes, and so cause the stock to overstep its old limits of variation.

Secondly, even though mutations be rare, yet selection in a given direction acts as an automatic trap for all mutations whose effects are in the same direction; thus, if it continues for a long stretch, it may accumulate plenty of these rare visitors, and so in time wholly alter the racial constitution.

If mutations go on appearing, the amount of change that can be wrought is unlimited. In a word, it gives an explanation for the steady change of a race in a given direction—and that is precisely the sort of thing that the fossil record shows.

There are many who cannot bring themselves to believe that such trifling alterations, even if accumulated over the generations, can ever give rise to the broad and striking changes of large-scale evolution. They forget the extreme slowness of the change revealed whenever we trace evolution in action.

Only because palaeontologists are thinking on a different scale of time from ordinary mortals can they speak of bursts of rapid evolution and the like. During such periods, change may be faster than at any other times; but judged by our ordinary standards it is still of an appalling slowness.

The Cenozoic Period (V) from its beginning to the Pliocene (V D) was a period of remarkably "rapid" evolution among the mammals.

But, all the same, it took about forty million years to make a horse out of an Eohippus; and yet the changes involved, important though they are, are changes of detail, not of essential plan, such as were needed to transform reptile to mammal, or fish to amphibian.

Suppose that we take the average age at reproduction of the horse and its ancestors to be five years (which is a generous estimate), we have, in this 40,000,000 years of change, a procession of some 8,000,000 generations. During the whole period the horse stock passed through eleven stages deemed worthy of generic rank. It changed its genus ten times; so that we can broadly say that it takes 800,000 generations for a new genus to evolve.

It is more difficult to calculate, even in this crude fashion, the time needed for specific change; but if we give the central line of each genus stage eight minor stages worthy of ranking as species, we have again probably been generous; yet even this would leave 100,000 generations for the evolution of each new species.

If we reflect that in the most extensive experiments on selection the limit as yet attained is about a hundred generations, and that even with Drosophila it would need three thousand years to run an experiment covering 100,000 generations, we may begin to feel that to demand "new species in our time" is an impertinence in face of Nature's lengthy patience.

If Homer had been a biologist instead of a poet, and had begun a selection experiment with the aim of artificially creating a new species of Drosophila, and if the experiment had been carefully continued ever since, we should now be just nearing the moment when we could expect a result.

Let us hope that three thousand years hence our descendants will not be lamenting our lack of foresight in setting experiments of this kind going; for only by means of such long-range work can the larger problems of evolution be brought to the final test of experiment and control.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—Diary of a modern Pepys: Came an amusing note from Frederic Burr Opper, grand old conquistador of the cartoons, and to breakfast with Bellefontaine's pride Howard Acton and amusing him so recalling days we were cubs together he had a lapse of memory and signed the chit.

For a promenade and talked to Jimmy Elliott and saw a man widely whispered to have pistoled Arnold Rothstein but roaming at large, smiling, debonaire! To my task but the typewriter stuck and I had a high time tinkering with it, treasuring such excuses not to work.

To dinner on the St. Regis roof and among others saw the Grantland Rices, the Keats Speeds, Regina Wallace and a Biddle—the one with the minstrel collar. So driving in the magic gold and cool of the park and home reading aloud to my wife from a racey life of Balzac.

It just gave me a start to recall my memory of New York goes clear back to the days when the Grand Concourse was not torn up.

* * *

More than 100 prominent gentlemen in New York have overcome stammering in various ways. Once a year they hold a dinner at which long and fluent speeches are made. I hear once an impediment is mastered it never troubles again. Some of the most charming people I know stutter.

A paragrapher anxious about Senator Heflin inquires: "What has become of the old Tom Shows?"

All of which is remindful that 10 Tom Thumb golf courses a week are still springing up around New York. The heavy play from midnight until daylight has provided philanderers with a dandy excuse, too, the dirty stay-outs!

Personal nomination for the grandest soda in town—the chocolate at Allegretti's in the Astor.

The Hudson River Bridge, the longest single span in the world nearing completion on upper Riverside, gleams at night with electric warnings for airplanes. You wouldn't think cable stretching could possibly be so exciting but I run up every week for a look. Also to see the batch of cute red heads in the little soft drink stand next door.

One of the road house cabarets along Pelham offers a side-splitting diversion, at least for me. A pair of skaters execute dizzy whirls and aerials. The male skater calls for volunteers from the diners. It is surprising how many respond who are not "plants"—a little "ham" in everybody! He swings them in the air a few moments, suddenly puts them on their feet and skates away. And Leon Erroll in his limpest day never stumbled into such hilarious gutta-percha falls.

* * *

At the same cabaret the dance floor is reached by arched foot bridges spanning a moat. In the moat are flocks of ducks quacking like everything and what won't they think up next? It does beat all.

* * *

A computation just arriving shows my yearly writing output exceeds 500,000 words and I can yawn just thinking of it. (Smart cracks filed in order received.)

Then there is the Portland, Ore., gentleman who writes: "I suppose you use the initials O. O. because only two zeros could express the nothingness of your stuff."

Just let me sit here. I'll be all right in a minute.

ONCE OVERS

By J. J. Mundy

Perhaps it is fortunate that you have not much money.

Plentifully supplied with money and leisure, what would you do with it?

For many years you have had ideas of what you would do if your financial condition would permit.

Some of the things were worthy of you, but you can't deny that other things would be detrimental to your health, and perhaps your reputation.

Are you not thought well of now by many of your friends because you have not done some of these things you long to do, but are deterred by lack of money and time?

You know very well what sort of person you might be if there were not hindering circumstances.

Often you have wanted to "punch some fellow's nose," or tell another just what you thought of him or her, and now you would snub certain persons if only you had a strong enough financial backing.

How entirely different you would be if near independence financially!

Instead of keeping check on mean impulses, you would give them full sway.

Considering what you might do if you dared, is it not a good thing that your pocketbook is flat and your bank account low?

Don't overlook a blessing of this kind, if you would not know how to use it if you had it.
